FOREWORD

This monograph on "The Jamatiyas" is another addition to our publications. The Directorate of Research have earlier published monographs on the Kukis, the Noatias, the Kalais, the Kaipemgs, the Uchais and the Reangs etc.

- 2. This monograph contains not only a very detailed analysis of social life and community organisation but also an intensive study of some of the Jamatiya villages. There being very few studies on the Jamatiyas earlier, it is hoped that this will be very useful for various purposes both for the Government and for the people, who are interested to know about the customs and manners, rites and rituals and various aspects of the ways of life of the Jamatiyas. In this context, the monograph prepared by Shri Prodip Nath Bhattacharjee will meet a long felt demand.
- 3. Shri Prodip Nath Bhattacharjee deserves gratitude of the Government for his valuable contribution.

I wish to acknowledge my indebtedness to Shri K. R. Bhattacharjee, Director of Research whose active interest in all research undertakings regarding the tribes of Tripura has been a constant source of inspiration to me.

I can never hope to measure in words my indebtedness to Professor Bela Dutta Gupta of the Calcutta University for her keen interest in my work.

I am also very grateful to Shri Jitendrajit Singh, of Dhaleswar who has gone through the manuscript.

In my field study I was actively helped by Shri Naba Kishore Jamatiya and Shri Chaitanyahari Jamatiya of Burburia, Shri Brajamohan Jamatiya of Karaimura, Shri Siddhi Pada Jamatiya, Shri Lalit Jamatiya and Shri Rebati Jamatiya of Silighati, Shri Madhuprem Jamatiya of Nagrai, Shri Nirodhan Jamatiya of Twibaklay and Shri Ganesh Kalai Singha of Jantranapara. I am deeply indebted to them for their sincere co-operation in my work.

I would also like to offer my thanks to Shri Khagendra Jamatiya of Khamarbati and Shri Krishnadhan Jamatiya of Hatay-Kusuk who helped me by providing information on various aspects of the Jamatiya culture.

I am specially thankful to Shri Debapriya Deb Barma, Linguistic Officer to the Directorate of Research for his co-operation at all times.

I would like to offer my thanks to Shri M. Ram Gopal Singh, Shri Ramaprasad Dutta (Paltuda), Shri Ratan Krishna Acharyya, Shri Amarendra Deb Barma, Shri Sambhu Deb Barma, Shri Dharendra Deb Barma, Shri Nagendra Jamatiya, Shri Debbrata Chakraborty, Shri Prodip Roy, and Dhrubojoyti Dutta for the help and encouragement I received from them in writing this book.

I shall consider my labour amply rewarded if this book is found helpful in any manner to the researchers in this field.

Agartala, 3.9.83.

Prodip Nath Bhattacharjee.

A KEY TO PRONUNCIATION OF NON-ENGLISH WORDS:

The letters with certain marks above them in some cases are pronounced as shown below:

O, o sounds like 'O' as in English 'hot'

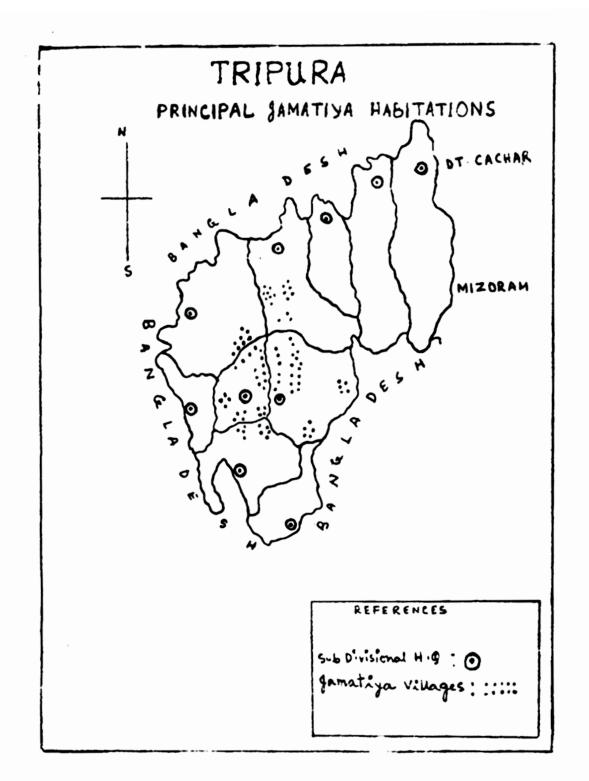

Yng sounds some what like ng as in English sing.

N after 'a' vowel generally stands for nasalization.

Signs and Symbols:

- + Joining of two words or syllables.
- = The resultant sound e.g. Twy + tum = Twytum
- / or e.g. Chamwrwy tisamanni/Chamwrwy tisamwng.

Chamwrwy tisamanni or Chamwrwy tisamwng

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

The Jamatiyas, one of the nineteen tribes of Tripura live largely in Udaipur and Amarpur Sub-Divisions of South Tripura District, and Khowai of West Tripura District. A few numbers of them are also found in the Sadar Sub-division of West Tripura district. They hold the third position in respect of numerical strength amoung the 19 tribes of Tripura.

According to the Census Report of 1971, the total population of the Jamatiyas in Tripura is 34,192 which is 7.59% of the total tribal population of the state.

The Survey Report of Hill Tipperah of 1874-75 by W.W. Hunter also shows that the Jamatiya tribe was holding the third position in respect of numerical strength. The following table indicates numerical position of the Jamatiya tribe in comparison with other tribes of Tripura.

Table-I 1874-75

Name of the Tribe	Numerical strength:
1. Tipperah	27,148
2. Jamatiyas	3,000
3. Nowatias	2,144
4. Riangs	2,435
5. Halams	5,577

According to the Census Report of 1901, 1911 and 1961 the total population of the Jamatiya tribe was:

TABLE-II

Persons during	the Census	Year:
1901	1911	1961
490	178	24,359

According to the Census Report of Tripura of 1931 the total population of the Jamatiyas was 11,090. The following table of 1931 shows the settlement of the Jamatiyas in various Sub-Divisions of Tripura.

TABLE-III

Centre	Total Population	Male	Female

Belonia
Total:	11,090	5,634	5,456
	(100%)	(50.80%)	(49.20%)

The above table shows that Udaipur Sub-Division tops the list and next to Udaipur come Amarpur, Khowai, Sonamura and Sadar Sub-Divisions in that order.

In the census Report of 1971, it is found that South Tripura District has the largest Jamatiya population, with 27,337 and next to it comes, West Tripura District with 6, 644 while North Tripura District has only 171.

Nomenclature:

There are controversies regarding the origin of the term Jamatiya. It is mentioned in the book "Tribes of Tripura" that from the etymology 'Jamat'— which in Bengali/Urdu means assemblage, the tribe name Jamatiya is supposed to have been derived. Some believe that the Jamatiyas were recruited in the army which was called Jamat and subsequently came to be known as Jamatiyas.

In this connection the views of Somendra Chandra Deb Barma and Omesh Saigal are worth mentioning here. In the book entitled 'Tripura Rajyaer Census Bibarani' 1931, Somendra Deb Barma states that"

"The Jamatiyas in the past served in the army of Tripura. The word Jamat means a group or a congregation of people. The army which was formed by them was called jamat. Since then they have been known as Jamatiyas".

Omesh Saigal holds the view that 'Jamat in Urdu means an assemblage of persons. The former rulers of Tripura used to recruit his army from a class of Tribals who were not only warriors but also has proved their loyality to him. A fair proportion of his (sic) armed forces were drawn from amongst the Jamatiyas who formed a group in his (sic) army, and it was from this fact that they derived their clan name.

In the opinion of others, the term jamatiya is derived from the word 'Jama' which means tax and twiya meaning not to bear the burden of. They hold the opinion that as the Jamatiyas were serving in the army, they were allowed to enjoy these privileges.

The above mentioned view is also supported by the statement of W.W. Hunter. He asserts that "the Jamatiyas are the fighting caste of Tipperahs and are well fitted for jungle warfare. They are exempted from all forced coolle labour, a privilege of which they are very tenacious and the infringement of which was the cause of a sanguinary rebellion some years ago".

Yet another group of elder persons of the Jamatiya community are of the opinion that when Pub Narayan (a legendary hero of the Jamatiya community) brought the image of Biyagwang Goriya (one of the popular deities of the Jamatiyas) from the land of Kukis by exhibiting great valour and presented it to the king, the king ordered him to worship the deity in a jamayet i.e. in an assemblage and since then those persons who are worshipping the image of Goriya in a group came to be known as Jamatiyas.

One is apt to find contradiction in these seemingly opposite views. But the words Joma, Jomat and jomayet came from the same language, that is Arabic and are related to military service rendered by the Jamatiyas. So the three opinions as mentioned above form a paradox which itself is a pointer to the fact that the term jamatiya is not an ancient one and so also the Tribe. The influence of Arabic became prominent in this region during the rule of the Nawabs of Bengal only. The continuous fighting between the kings of Tripura and the Muslim rulers of Bengal paved gradually the way for this Arabic language to penetrate to Tripura thus casting its influence to a great extent.

Ethnic origin of the Jamatiyas:

According to suhash chottopadhay, a noted linguist, the following eight tribes namely, the Tipra, Ring, Jamatiya, Noatiya, Rupini, Koloi, Ulchoi and Murasing belong to a one and undivided group. Their spoken language is Kagbarak. Kagbarak belongs to the Bodo branch of the Tibeto-Burman language group.

Regarding the ethnic origin of the Jamatiyas, the earlier authors have described them as a branch of the Tripuri tribe in their classification of the Tripuris.

R. H. Sneyed Hutchinson is of the opinion that "The Tippera in the Chiittagong Hill Tracts number 23,341 and are scattered through-out the district. This tribe is also called Tripura and is divided into two classes, the Purna or Tippera proper and the Jamatiyas.

In the Census Report of 1901 E.A. Gait states that the Tipperas are divided into Puran or Tipra proper and the Jamatiyas.'

In the classification of the Tipperahs, Edward Tuite Dalton states that 'The tribes of Tipperahs are four in number—Rajbangsi, Nowatyahs, Jomatias (sic) and Reyanges.

In describing the orgin of the Jamatiyas—Kailash Chandra Singha holds the view that 'they are a pure branch of the Tripuris. They were the main army of Tripura during the ancient period.

In this context E.A. Gait is of the opinion that 'From them the Tipra kings formally recruited their fighting men.'

Omesh Saigal holds the view that 'They were given a special position amongst the tribals and were exempted from Ghar Chuktis (House tax) and given settlement mainly in the Udaipur division. As a result of this, the Jamatiyas, though they once belonged to the Tipuri Tribe, managed to evolve a polictical system of their own and developed economically and socially.'

Regarding the origing of the Jamatiya tribe, Kailash Chandra Singha also holds the view that, the Jamatiya tribe is a branch of the Tripuri tribe. In his Rajmala he has mentioned that 'the Tripras or Twipras are chiefly divided into forur branches e.g., (1) Tipra, (2) Jamatiya, (3) Noatiya and (4) Riang. These branches are further sub-divided into various branches.

The view of Thakur Nagendra Chandra Deb Barma is worth mentioning here. He points it out that

It is known from the investigation of the history of Tripura that when Udaipur was the capital of Tripura, tribal people were given permanent residence round the capital for doing various duties of the State. The system of paying monthly salaries to the soldiers did not exist at that time. Instead, they were given land settlement around the capital. This assemblage of the community gradually established matrimonial alliance and blood relationship among themselves and ultimately developed into a separate endogamous community.

In this context it should be noted here that till to-day the Jamatiyas are concentrated mainly in the Amarpur and Udaipur Sub-Division which were erstwhile capitals of Tripura. Amarpur was the capital of Tripura for a short period during the reign of Amar Manikya and Rangamati which was later named as Udaipur during the reign of Udai Manikya was the capital of Tripura for a long time.

In this context, the view of Somendra Chandra Deb Barma in the Census Report of 1931 is worth mentioning. He holds the view that 'The Tripuri Khatriyas are divided into five groups (1) Puran Tripura (2) Deshi Tripura (3) Jamatiya (4) Riang and (5) Noatiya. These five groups belong to the Khatriya Varna.

Ethnologically, the Jamatiyas are akin to the Tripuris and their physical characteristics also resemble those of the Tripuris. Their language is also the same. They speak Tripuri in a drawl tone.

The above mentioned views indicate that the Jamatiya tribe is supposed to have originated from the defence personnels of Tripura. As the armed forces of the previous rulers of Tripura consisted of the different tribes e.g. Tripuris, Noatiyas and the Rinags there is every chance of the admixture of various tribes in the formation of the Jamatiya tribe. There is also a little trace of the Kukis in this tribe as Kherpang lineage of the Biyagwnang Goriya came from Kuki land along with the image of Biyagwang Goriya. Besides this, to speak more precisely, as the Tripuris held a predominant position in the armed forces of Tripura, they played vital part in the formation of the Jamatiya tribe.

The matrimonial relationship among the families of the defence personnels played an important role as a melting pot in the first stage of its development.

Later on the neighbouring tribals who were attracted by their settled cultivation, disciplined life, administrative pattern and unity entered this community by matrimonial relationship.

DIALECT

The Jamatiya dialect is one of the eight dialects of the Kagbarak language. According to the census report of 1971 the total number of the Kagbarak speaking persons in Tripura is 3,60.654 which is 79.97% of the total tribal population of Tripura. It should be noted that the Rupini, the Murasing and the Koloi subtribes were not reported as Kagbarak speaking tribe in the 1971 Census Report though their mother tongue is also Kagbarak. Kagbarak language has been scheduled as a Tribal Language by a Presidential order published in the Gazette of India, Part-II Section I dated August 13, 1960. And now it is one of the two official languages of Tripura.

The Kagbarak speaking tribes and subtribes of Tripura are

- (1) Tripuri/Tipra
- (2) Reang
- (3) Jamatiya
- (4) Noatia
- (5) Rupini
- (6) Koloi
- (7) Ulsoi and
- (8) Murasing.

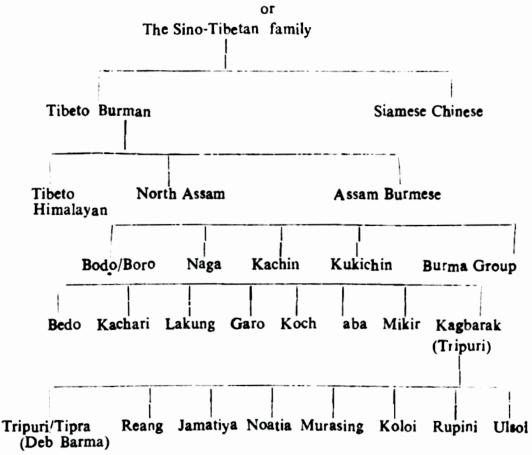

The phonetic, morphemic and syntactic characters of their dialects have close affinity with each other, though they have their own individual characteristics as is usual with dialects of almost every languages. But the degree of difference of the eight dialects is not so much as is found in the case of Bengali or Hindi languages.

The view of Dr. Suhas Chottopadhyay regarding the close affinity of the eight dialects of the Kagbarak language is worth mentioning here. According to him, "The extent of dialectical difference among the different dialects of Kagbarak is not as wide as is found in the cases of Bengali or German. The phonemic structure of the dialects of Kagabarak are almost identical. The grammatical structures are also wonderfully similar to each other. And the differences in their vocabulary are very negligible.

The Jamatiya dialect of the Kagbarak language belongs to the Bodo language group. The languages belonging to this group originated from the Sino-Tibetan language in which the Second largest number of people of the world speak. The process of how the Jamatia dialect has come into being with its root in the Sino-Tibetan language group may be shown in the following chart:—

The Sino-Tibetan or Kirata language

The following list of a few Jamatiya words with their Boro (a language belonging to the Bodo/Boro group, spoken in Assam by the Bodos) equivalents show the close connection of the vocabulary of the two languages.

Jamatiya dialect (Kak-Barak)	Boro	English
Mwtay	Moday	God/Spirit
Sal	San	Sun
Twy	dui	water
Bukur	bigur	skin
Twyma	duima	river
Tao	dau	Bird
Fickung	bikhung	back
На	ha	earth
Thaili	Thaili	Plantain

The affinity of the Jamatiya dialect with other branches of the Bodo language group in vocabulary is shown in the following list:

Englis	h Boro	Rabha	La!ung	Diamasa	Hojai	Garo	Jamatiya	Chinitya
Get-	man	man	iman	mai	mai	man	man	nim
Ask-	sang	sing	sang	shing	shing	sang	sa	shi

[The above lists are prepared on the basis of the list prepared by G.A. Grierson, Linguistic Survey of India, Vol. III Part-II Page 111, 112, 113.]

In spite of the structural and morphological affinity between the Jamatiya dialect and the eight dialects of the Kagbarak language, it differs a great deal from them phonologically. The phonetic peculiarity and use of shortened forms of pronunciation of words or change of pronunciations in the sub-struction of one or more alphabet either from the first or last part of a word make it difficult for the speakers of other dialects of Kagbarak to speak this dialect correctly. Partial or full nasalization is also another characteristic of the Jamatiya dialect.

As the Jamatiya dialect is still in the spoken form and as they have no script of their own it is very difficult for the other scripts to get the right pronunciation as they have and also to keep the special tonal characteristics of this dialect intact. Some structural patterns of Jamatiya sentences are given below:

- 1) The usual order of words is subject + object + verb e.g.
 - a) Ang may chauw= 1 eat rice
 Sub obj verb Sub verb obj
 - b) Boo ball thungo= He plays foot ball
 Sub obj verb sub verb obj.
- 2) Adjective of a sentence usually takes place after noun e.g.
 - a) Khum naithok = Beautiful flower

Noun Adj. Adj Noun

- b) Cherai Kan'han=Good boy Noun Adj. Adj. Noun
- 3) In imperative moods, in case of order the suffix 'di' is added to the verb. The word 'doo' indicating request is used in different positions in the sentences-e.g.
 - a) Tabok nogwo Thangdi=Go home now. (order)
 - b) Doo ako may Chagradi=First take your meal (request) (initial position)

- 4) The suffix 'ya' and the word 'Kwrwy' are added to the verb and noun to indicate a simple negative sentence. e.g.
 - a) Ang uro thangya = I do not go there.
 - b) Ani rang kwrwy = I have no money.

(Here, in the first sentence, the word 'thang' (to go) is the verb and .ya' is the suffix to denote negation. In the second sentence 'rang' is the noun and the word 'kwrwy is used to denote negation.)

- 5) Generally the word 'Ta' is applied before a verb in order to denote an imperative negative sentence to express don't e.g.
 - a) Nwng may ta chadi = (you) Don't eat rice.
 - b) Ta wanadi = Don't think.

Here, 'ta' is used before the verb to indicate don't.)

- 6) Usually noun is formed adding different suffixes like 'nay' 'mwng etc. to the verb e.g.
 - a) Boo rwchapo = He sings.

 Here, rwchap + 0= Rwchapo=Sing/Sings (verb)

 (To sing) Present tense)

 verb indicator,
 - b) Boo rwchapnay kanhan=He is a good singer.

 Here, rwchap+nay =Rwchapnay=Singer (Noun)

 (Sing) +(doer)

 verb
 - c) Booni rwchapmwng kanhan = His song is good.

 Here, Rwchap+mwng = Rwchapmwng=Song (Noun) (to sing) verb
- 7) Generally the gender is determined according to the nature of the concerning noun.

A noun that denotes a male is a masculine gender.

A noun that denotes a female is a feminine gender.

A noun that denotes either a male or a female or both is said to be common gender.

Some of the ways of forming the feminine genders are :

- a) By using an entirely different words e.g.
 - i) Say (Husband) -Hik/Bihik (Wife)
 - ii) Chamri (Bridegroom) —Hajwk (bride)

- iii) Yar/Kichiyng —Mare (the famale friend of a female) (the male friend of a male)
- iv) Chwla (boy) —Bwrwy (girl)
- b) By adding a particle or suffix like jwk, ma, bwrwy, bi, ti, etc. at the end of the verb e.g.
 - i) Swy —(dog—any male or female) swy+ma=Swima —female dog.

- ii) Pun —(goat-any male or female) pun+jwk = Punjwk—She goat.
- iii) Takum (Swan—any male or female) Takum+bwrwy Goose.

Names of persons ending with 'ti' generally indicate the name of women e.g.

Afuti, Kufuti, Bwlangti etc.

- c) The suffixes la, sa, ta, jwa etc. are generally used to denote masculine gender of the noun e.g.
 - i) Swy + la = Swyla = male dog.
 - ii) Pum+jwa=Punjwa = He goat.
 - iii) Takum+chwla=Takumchwla =Gander.
 - d) Borok (man), Cheray (child), sa (child)etc. are used as common gender.
- 8) The case endings (vivakties) as are usually used may be classified in the following table:

Case	Nomina- tive Case	Accusa- tive Case	Instru- mental Case	Dative Case	Ablative Case	Pose- ssive Case	Locative Case
Number	1st	2nd	3r d	4th	5th	6th	7th
Case endings	0	no	bay	no	ni	ni	0
Example	Borok	Borokno	Yakbay	borokno	borokni	borokni	Borok

1st=Ram may chauw—Ram eats rice

2nd=Ang Ramno u boi rokha = I gave this book to Ram.

3rd=Chwng kolom bay Swiwo =We write with pen.

4th=Bika binano bik rodi =Give alms to the begger.

5th=Bwfang Sakani bwthaay Kwlay

anhan = The fruit has fallen from the tree.

Or,

Tinini similsini iskul fiyognay = The School will repoen from today.

6th=U Ramni boi =This is Ram's book.

7th=Nogsingwo borok tonguw = There is a man in the house.

Note:—It will be seen from the examples given above that the system of case, and that of using different particles as case endings are more or less similar to Sanskrit and Bengali Grammer rules of the respective areas.

There is no distinction between the case ending particles of the 2nd and 4th case in the Jamatiya dialect. So also is the case with Bengali.

Generally suffixes are added to the verb when the subject is in plural
 —e.g.

a) Ang boi pore we = I read book
 b) Chwng are porelayuw = We read there

c) Nwng ta wanadi = You (singular) don't think.
d) Nirog tawalaydi = Yoy (Plural) don't think.
- He has eaten rice

e) Boo may chalaha = He has eaten rice.
f) Borog may chabay lanha = They have eaten rice.

In the above mentioned a, c, and e sentences as the subjects are in singular number, the verbs are in their neutral form. But in the sentences—b, d and f as the subjects are in plural number the suffixes 'lay, 'bay have been used.

10) The three main tenses used in the Jamatiya dialect are 'tabok' (present tense), 'layma' (Past tense') and 'fayma' (future tense). In the Jamatiya dialect the tense of a verb not only shows the time of an action or event but also the state of it. So the use of the three main tenses and their continuous forms are in vogue in the Jamatiya dialect.

The Chief tenses along with their continuous forms of the verb khwlay (to do) as used in the Jamatiya dialect has been given below:

PRESENT TENSE:

Singular Plural

1st person Ang khwlaywo
2nd person Nwng khwlaywo
3rd person Boo khwlaywo
Borog khwlaywo

[Present indefinite tense is formed by adding wo/o as suffix to the verb.]

PAST TENSE:

1st person Ang khwlaykha Chwng khwlaykha
2nd person Nwng khwlaykha Nirog khwlaykha
3rd person Boo khwlaykha Borog khwlayha

[Past indefinte tense is formed by using 'Kha' as suffix to the verb]

FUTURE TENSE:

1st person Ang khwlaynay
2nd person Nwng khwlaynay
3rd person Boo khwlaynay
Borog khwlaynay

[Future indefinite tense is formed using 'nay/'anu' as suffix to to the verb.]

PRESENT CONTINUOUS

1st Ang khwlayuwy tonguw
2nd Nwng khwlayuwy tonguw
3rd Boo khwlayuwy tonguw
Borog khwlayuwy tonguw

[Present continuous tense is formed using 'uwy' as suffix to the verb and 'tanguw' at the end]

PAST CONTINUOUS

1st Ang khwlayuwy tongkha
2nd Nwng khwlayuwy tongkha
3rd Boo khwlayuwy tongkha
Borog khwlayuwy tongkha

[Here 'uwy' is used as suffix to the verb and tongkha at the end]

FUTURE CONTINUOUS

1st Ang khwlayuwy tongnay
2nd Nwng khwlayuwy tongnay
3rd Boo khwlayuwy tongnay
Borog khwlayuwy tongnay

[Future continuous tense is formed using 'uwy' as suffix to the verb and 'tongnay' at the end]

There is no distinction between the past indefinite form and present perfect form in the Jamatiya dialect. Both the tenses are expressed using words 'Kha' or 'laha' at the end of the sentences.

a) Ang may chakha = I have eaten rice.

b) Ang miya may chakha = I ate rice yesterday.

c) Ang fuwaiyo may chalaha = I have eaten rice in the morning

d) Ang miya fuwaiyo may chalaha = I ate rice in the yesterday morning.

The distinction can be understood from the context or from a time adverb.

Above are the different jamatiya sentences in different tenses along with their English translations. For these the mechanism of Jamatiya tense for ming pattern may be seen in greater details.

11) Pronouns:-

The followings are personal pronouns:

Plural: Singular : Chwng (We) Ang (I) Chini (Our) Ani (My) Chinino (Us) Ano (Mc) Nirog (You) Nwng (You) Nirogni (Your) Nini (Your) Niragno(to you) Nono (You) Boorog (They) Boo (He) Boorogni (Their) Bini (Him) Boorogno (Them) Boono (His)

Demonstrative Pronouns are:

U= ThisIyang= This way (farther)Omo= ItUyang= That way (nearer)Uwmo= ThatUwyang= That way (farther)

Aiyang = This way (Nearer)

Interrogative pronouns are:

Swba/Sabw = Who Swbani/sani = Whose Twma/Ta = What Biyang = Where Bomoo/boo = Which Buko = Where.

Swbano/sano = Whom

12) Usually, the 2nd and 3rd person, pronouns have only one level unlike the case with, for example, Bengali. In Bengali, the 2nd person pronoun 'you' has at least three levels: Aponi/Apni (for respect), Tumi (general), Twi (for intimacy and derogation). But the Jamatiyas us only 'Nwng' in all these cases and such distinction of levels do not exist in their dialect.

But in case of certain specific relationship terms the suffixes 'song' and 'rog' are added to nouns thus making them plural.

The following are some of those relationship terms:

- a) The bridegroom and the bride address their father in law and mother in law as 'Babasong' and 'Amasong' respectively.
- b) The husband's elder brother is addressed as 'Dadasong' Daasong' by the bride similar a wife's elder brother is addressed as 'Dadasong' Daasang by the bride groom.
 - The husband addresses his wife's elder sister as 'Balsong' similarly the wife also addresses the elder sister of her husband as 'baisong'.
- d) The bridegroom is addressed by his father in law and mother in law as 'Chamraisasong',. Similarly, the bride is addressed by her father in law and mother in law as "Hanjwksasong".

- e) The bride is addressed by her husband's brother and sister as 'Buw-aijwksong'/'Buwaijwkrog'.
- f) Similarly, the bridegroom is addressed by his wife's elder brother and sister as 'Buwaisong'/Buwairog'.
- 13) The parts of speech present in the Jamatiya dialect are:

a) Noun = Ram iskulo Thango. Ram goes to School.

b) Pronoun = Boo iskulo Thango He goes to School.

c) Verb = Boo iskulo Thango.

He goes to School.

d) Adverb = Boo tuluk tuluk khe hiynguwy thanguw He is going slowly.

e) Preposition = Bwfang sakawo mokra tonguw.

There is a monkey on the tree.

f) Adjective = Ram cherai kahan Ram is a good boy.

g) Conjunction = Ang bay nwng iskulo thangnay You and I shall go to school.

h) Interjection = Ako'! ani kwpal haya.

Alas! my luck is bad.

Note:—The conjunctions 'bay' and 'tey' both mean 'and'. But 'tey is used when the nouns it joins are more than two in number. e.g.

Nini boi, kolom tey khata tobodi = Bring your book, pen and khata.

Nini boi bay kolom naithog — Your book and pen are good.

Unlike the English language adjectives do not change forms when indicating degrees of comparison in the Jamatiya speech. It is ascertained from the context and by the addition of certain words such as 'say (for comparative) 'mamlaisay' (for superlative). Of course other words are also used for this purpose according to the context. e.g.

a) Ram cheray kanhan = Ram is a good boy.

(Positive Degree)

b) Ram Shyamni say kanhan = Ram is better than shyam (Comparative)

c) Ram u kamini mamlai say cherai kanhan (Superlative) = Ram is the best boy of this village.

14) The frequent usage of shortend form/weakening of sound of root words by not pronouncing some letters from the first part of a word or even words from a sentence is also an important characteristic of the Jamatiya speech e.g.

a) Aswk Whgkha honkhwlay = Aswk wngkha khwlay = Aswk wngkha khe — Aswk wngkhe = Aswk wngkhe = Aswk wnkhe = akhe b) Twmani = Tani c) Bokhook = Khook. d) Bwkwrang = Birds' Wing Kwrang kang e) Bokol = Small round shaped article Kol f) Bwthwy = Egg Thwy 15) Borrowed words:

A good amount of borrowed words from the neighbouring tribal and non-tribal languages especially various local Bengali wards are also found in the Jamatiya dialect. An amount of Parsi, Arabic and recently some English words can also be traced in the Jamatiya speech,

But these borrowed words have been completely assimilated by them. They pronounce them according to their own phonetic structure (characteristic) and as a result these words have lost their original phonetic charactertistic in their Jamatiya use.

Some of the Borrowed words are:

	Jamatiya	English	Bengali
i)	Osubida	Difficulty	Oshubidha
ii)	Obab	Want	Obhab
iii)	Baaba	Father	Baba
iv)	Chati	lamp	Chati
v)	Lota	Jar	Luta
vi)	Dukh	Sorrow	Dukhkho
vii)	Upay	Way	Upay.
viii)	Kisa	Little	Kisu
ix)	Goiam	Guava	Goyam

x)	Pukiri		Pond	i		Pukur
xi)	Ajaira		Unno usele	ecessa ss.	ry,	Ajaira
xii)	Nay		Gran	d mot	ther	Nani
	-		 		•.

16) There exists in the Jamatiya dialect quite a good number of words which have different meanings according to their pronunciation. A language with such a characteristic is known as tone language in linguistic. Jamatia is a tone language e.g.

a)	Tan	= i) To cut (ii) What (iii) To play on a musical instrument.
b)	Twy	=i) Water; (ii) Cold; (iii) the egg (iv) to carry.
c)	Nung	=i) to drink (ii) to call (iii) to adress.
d)	Cho	=i) to lie in wait/search for an opportunity
		ii) To wet (iii) A cinder.
e)	San	=i) Salt (ii) ear; (iii) The shon grass.
f)	Hon	=i) To rebuke; (ii) To speak; (iii) To give.
g)	Chan	=i) An uproar; (ii) To wear off.
h)	Chen	=i) Defeat; (ii) to become ill gradually.
i)	Kan	=i) To wear; (ii) To speak loudly.

17. Numerals: The numbers as they exist in the Jamatiya Tribe are 1 to 10 and 20 only. They are as follows:—

1 Sa
2 Nwy
3 Tham
4 Brwy
5 Ba
6 dok
7 sini
8 Char
9 Chuku
10 Chi
20 Khol.

For other numbers they use combination or combinations of these words. For instance 11 (eleven) is 'chisa which literally means ten one; chi = ten, sa = one, 25 (twenty five) is 'Khol ba' which literally means twenty five; Khol = twnty, ba=five. 45 is 'khol nwy ba' which literally means two twenties and five and so on.

In expressing the number of an object they use different words meaning shape, size, length, some parts of the body, etc. before them according to the object they qualify. There are fixed rules about the words to be used with a particular object while counting it, for instance.

a) Borok Khorok brwy

= Four men

[Here 'brwy' means four and 'Khorok' is the word used with human beings while counting them. 'Khorok' literally means head which is the shorter form of 'Bookhorok'.]

b) Musuk ma brwy

= Four cows.

[Ma is the word used with animals while counting them. It is the shorter form of the word 'mang'].

c) Thaylik Thaybrwy

= Four bananas.

[Here, 'thay' is the word used with fruits while counting them. The word 'Thay' is the shorter form the 'bwthay' which literally means fruit].

d) Kolom Kong brwy

= Four pens.

[Here, Kong is the word used with long things while counting them. The word 'Kong' is the shorter form of the word 'bakong' which literally means long thing].

e) Boi Kang brwy

= Four books.

Or,

Blai Kang brwy

= Four leaves.

[Here 'kang' is the word used with flat things while counting them. The word 'Kang' is the shorter form of the word 'bwkwrang' which literally means wings of the birds.

f) Rang khook brwy

= Four rupees

[Khook is the classifier used with rupees while counting them. The word khook is the shorter form of the word 'bakhook' which literally means bunch/heap].

g) Toktwy thwy brwy

= Four eggs of hen.

[The word 'Thwy' is used with eggs. It is the shorter form of the word 'bwthwy' which literally means egg.]

h) Markle kol brwy

= Four marbles

Or,

Mokol kol nwy

= two eyes.

[The word kol is used with small and to some extent round shaped articles. It is the shorter form of the word 'Bokol' which means small round shaped articles].

This above mentioned feature is found in the case of some other languages of Tibeto-Burman group also.

In his description of the numerals of the 'Sho' or 'Khyang' Tribe of Southern Chin sub-group G.A. Grierson writes—

"There are several general prefixes. The Chittagong list occasionally uses the prefix 'pai' before numerals applying to human beings; thus pa pai-ni, two fathers. Fryer has pun, which before h and m becomes pum; thus, pum-hot, one. Honghton gives piin, or before the two first numerals, pa. In the specimen we find macho hu-math, goat young one, where hu is a generic prefix. Honghton gives ziin for animals and birds; theck for fiishes, arrows etc; ba for reptiles; lun for long things; and lo for flat things. Fryer has zum for quadrupeds; thek for fish; and 'yum' for reptiles." [GRIERSON G.A.: Linguistic Survey of India, Vol. III. Tibeto-Burman Family's Part-III. Specimens of the Kuki chin and Burma Groups. Page-335, First Edition 1904, Reprint-1967. Motilal Banarasi Dass, Bunglow Road, Jwharnagar, Delhi-7].

From the above discussion of the Jamatiya dialect the following points may be seen:

- i) The Jamatiya dialect belongs to Sino-Tibetan family of the Tibeto-Burman Sub family of the Assam Burmese branch of the Bodo/Boro group of the Kagbarak language.
 - ii) Inspite of its morphological and syntactical affinity with the kagbarak language, it differs from it phonetically to some extent.
 - iii) Partial or full nasalization is a feature of this dialect.
 - iv) The using of short forms of pronunciation is also a feature of it.
 - v) Another feature is the presence of many borrowed words from non-tribal languages, mainly the local Bengali.

This brief survey gives only the barest outline of the Jamatiya dialect. The Jamatiya dialect is still at the oral stage. Not much has been done to study this language properly so far.

The need for a new and comprehensive survey of the language in the light of modern methods of linguistic investigation is an urgent need not only for academic purposes but also for working out of a correct solution of the language problem.

The poor numerical strength of the Jamatiya speaking persons cannot be the only yard stick of the standard of this language. The richness of oral literature should also be taken into consideration in this context.

The Jamatiya dialect possess a rich oral literature, songs, legands, tales, proverbs, riddles etc. The lyrics give glimpse of their life. Linguists will be able to discover the vast treasure of their dialect if they study it as one of the sources to the origin and to development of the Tibeto-Burman Sub-family of languages.

CHAPTER II

SOCIAL LIFE

The Society of the Jamatiyas is patriarchal. The superior position of the male over the female is acknowledged in the Society in all matters. Socially, the Jamatiyas are endogamous. In this respect E.A. Gait is of the opinion that unlike all other tribes of Tripura, which have different daphas or Sub-Divisions among them, the Jamatiya is a single endogamous tribe without having any sub-class in it.

The basic unit of the Jamatiya society is the family. It appears from the survey of a Jamatiya village that nuclear, simple or idependent type i.e. family consists of a married couple with its unmarried children or married couple having no children has the highest frequency. Next in order comes the type of family consisting of married couple and their unmarried children together with the parent or parents of the man.

Next comes the extended or joint type of family consisting of several married brothers with their spouses and children as well as parents and unmarried siblings, also married son or sons with their wives and children.

It should be noted that monogamy i.e. man with one wife is the general rule of the Society. A Polygynous type of family i.e. a man with more than one wife may be found in some cases. But they are just exceptions. The rule of Polyandry i.e. a woman with more than one husband is strictly prohibited in their Society.

Generally disparity in income, immorality, lack of obedience to the elders, unwillingness to work in a co-operative way, quarrel among the family members are considered as main causes responsible for the break up of the Jamatiya family.

The adoption of a child boy or girl is quite frequent among the Jamatiyas. The adopted son is called Pusimanibwsa or lirmachwla. Generally only childless, well to do couples indulge in such practices. Some times this is done through religious functions.

Position of woman :-

Generally the position of the Jamatiya woman is the same as that of husband's. She is a hard worker and she works harder than a man in many respects. But still, her status is recognised by the position of her husband.

Usually the male dominates over the woman. The father as the head of the household occupies the central position in the family. Lineage and descent are traced through the father's line, and so the society is patrilineal. The woman never challanges the superiority of the man. The Women are also restricted to take part in village Council elections.

The women spend their whole life in performing household chores only. She prepares food and cleans the house, fetches water and fuel and clean domestic utensils and clothes. All these give her little time for recreation.

The role of the Jamatiya woman in the economic sphere of the family is very important. The women help the male members in different agricultural activities such as weeding, transplanting, harvesting etc. They also weave their clothes of daily use on their indigeneous looms.

In the matter of religious rites the status of a women is much lower than that of a man. The women are prohibited from becoming an Ochay (traditional priest) of their community.

Ceremonial friendship:

The practice of ceremonial friendship is in v ogue in the Jamatiya community. The only restriction in ceremonial friendship is that the male person's friendship should be with a male only. Similarly, a woman's ceremonial friend must be a woman.

Kinship System :-

The members of the Jamatiya Society of Tripura are tied together in groups by various types of bonds of which the lineal descent and marriage ties are important. The unilateral extended lineage group is known as Santay. All members of the same santay are believed to be originated from the same parents. In case of death of any member of a santay all the members belonging to the same santay observe impurity for a period of thirteen days. Only a prerson of the same santay has the right to perform the sraddha (funeral ceremony) for a member of the same santay. Generally marriage relationship does not take place between the members of the same santay.

Generally a santay is known by the name of a prominent member of that lineage. Some of the Santays are as follows:

- 1. Kumariya langta santay—It is named after the name Kumariya langta, a famous saint who did not wear clothes.
- Parikshit Santay—It is named after Parikshit, a famous Jamatiya Sardar under whose leadership Jamatiya revolt of 1863 took place.
- 3. Biyagwnang Kherfang Santay—It is named after the Kherfang of the Biyagwnang Gariya.

There are two systems of Kinship terminologies of the Jamatiyas—(i) Classificatory; (ii) Denotative.

The traditional norm of the Jamatiya Society is regarded as classificatory system. The denotative terms are adopted from the neighbouring castes and communities. A chart of Jamatiya kinship terminologies has been given below:

General rules of the kinship nomenclature:

The Jamatiyas use certain words which show the position of the kin whether he is junior or senior to particular relative with whom the reference is made. The followings are a few examples of the indication of such differentiation of age:

- 1. Father's elder brother is yongchwla, father's younger brother is kaka.
- 2. Father's elder brother's wife is yongbwrwy, father's younger brother's wife is kaki.

3. Elder brother is dada; younger brother is fayung.

Again the differentiation of age is marked by the application of certain suffix or prefix terms such as:

Kotor means eldest.

Kwchar means middle or Second eldest.

Kusu means next to Kwchar.

It should be mentioned here that unlike the Bengalee kinship terminologies, in the Jamatiya kinship terminologies, the adjectives are always added at the end of a term. Thus where as bay indicates sister, bay kotor means eldest sister.

Life cycle:

From birth to death the life of the Jamatiyas is surrounded by various taboos requiring a number of rituals, sacrifices and festivals performed at different stages of life. An attempt has been made here to describe the different customs they observe at birth of a child, at marriage and death.

Pregnancy and birth:

The state of pregnancy of the woman is considered as one of the critical stages in her life. Though she becomes physically weak household duties do not give her any rest. Some times as result of excessive hard work miscarriage takes place. When miscarriage takes place within the first three months of pregnancy it is called kwchak kulumanni. If it takes place after that period it is called talsokoa.

There is a belief current among them that a pregnant woman should be given what she desires to eat, of course according to the means of the family. Otherwise, the newly born baby would be too greedy to have the food item his mother could not have.

Pregnant women are prohobited from eating mirga (a variety of fish) and fishes which have no scales.

At the fifth month of pregnancy, a religious function name Katheuw is performed to ensure easy and safe birth. The puja is to be performed in the morning and evening. The morning performance is called aychuk katheuw, and the evening performance is called sariykatheuw. Generally duck is sacrificed in this puja.

There is a belief current among the Jamaityas that if the pregnant woman feels that the right side of her abdomen is heavy or if that part bulges she would give birth to a male child. The similar feeling on the left side indicates the coming of a female child.

The pregnant woman should not cross the court of pain (Shulogoti) drawn on the earth otherwise, she may be in danger at the time of child birth.

She should not work while there is eclipse going on. She may give birth to a deformed child if she works during eclipse.

If a pregnant woman kills a fish by throwing it down on the ground violently her child would have some sort of defect.

Twin babies will be born if a pregnant woman takes fruits joined together.

During pregnancy of the wife the husband should not go for hunting, act as assistant to the Ochay (Priest) and sacrifice an animal or participate in the cremation of any body.

Delivery of the child:

When the labour pain starts the woman informs it to her husband or to any relative of hers. Child delivery is attended by women only. In every village there are a few women who have experience as delivery nurse, the kumajwk. and lokmajwk. They are not fixed persons. Any woman who has experience in this respect can become kumajwk and lokmajwk. They are not paid in cash. They are offered chok (wine) only and on the day of the lanpra Puja they are entertained with a feast which is known as Kumajwk lokmajwk mamwng.

The necessary articles required at the time of child delivery such as yakathan, rope, wamutha etc. are kept ready well in advance.

Generally no separate room is reserved for child delivery. It is done in the corner of the main house marked by placing bamboo pieces along the ground. The house in which delivery takes place is called masumwra nog or baa nog.

The technique of delivery varies from area to area. In some cases the woman is asked to hold a rope hanged horizontally over her head, in sitting position, her legs extending forward and pressing firmly against the yakathan (bamboo made leg support used by owmen while working at a loin loom) catching the rope she gives pressure to the yakathan which helps her in having a normal delivery. The sitting position is similar to the position taken by the Jamatiya women folk at the time of weaving rinayborok in their loin loom.

It is believed that in case of delay in delivery if the husband gives a gentle pressure on the abdomen of the wife delivery will take place quickly.

In the case of complications the husband should tell his wife that he is going to catch crab and should go out from the house with some articles. This they believe, helps speedy delivery.

After delivery, the umbilical cord is cut with a sharp bamboo-splinter called wamutha. The fo (placenta) with suchubwswlwy (sanctified mustared seeds, turmeric and paddy etc.) is wrapped in a banana leaf very carefully and is taken out side the boundary of the village where a pit is dug and the placenta with chuchubwswlwy is burried.

Immediately after the delivery, the mother is given a glass of warm water mixed with chuwa to drink. Then the baby is washed with warm water by the Kumajwk. Then the Kumajwk hands over the baby to the lokmajwk. The lokmajwk tucks a chopper under right armpit and head of the baby in his right hand and says ani wngka de? ani wngkha de? ani wngkha de? meaning 'have I delivered' three times raising and lowering her feet and facing north so that the head of the baby points towards the east. Then the mother is washed with twytung (warm water) by the kumajwk and the lokmajwk jointly and seated beside fire. This is called siynghangmwng. It reduces her pain and helps to stop unwanted discharge.

In case of excessive discharge the mother is given water with which dalkwchak (musuri dal) was washed as medicine. In case of insufficient discharge the mother is given water with which dalkormo (Khesari dal) was washed as medicine. In cases of irregularity of discharge, charms and incantatious by the Ochay is used. This kind of post natal treatment is known as Kwchak baauw or kwchak baaya.

In case of the birth of a male child the period of impurity is observed for eighteen days and incase of a female child seven days impurity is observed by the mother. The period of impurity is called masumwra. When the mother becomes physically fit her head is washed with wash water. A function named aburswngmwng is performed in connection with the bath of the mother. The head of the baby is also washed the same day, which is called masumwra khorok sumwng.

When the umbilical cord of the baby dries up the lanpra Puja is performed in his name which is officiated by the Ochay in the morning. The relatives of the baby give him a name and tell the Ochay to perform the puja in that name. In some cases the Ochay is asked to give a name to the baby. This Puja is known as chwray kwtharni lanpra romwng (giving the lanpra puja for the holy baby). The hair of the baby is cut by the barbar and he is paid a fixed sum of Rupee one and paise twenty five for it.

Then the Ochay goes to a tank or stream and performs the Puja to propitiate the evil spirit of water and it is called twyswkal tamwng. After the performance of the puja the Ochay strikes his chopper in the water which is an indication of cutting the evil spirit. This is done so that the evil spirit of water does not cast its evil eye on the baby. This evil eye is called sily bayli in the Jamatiya dialect. After this puja the clothes of the baby is washed on the ghat (bathing place).

Before performance of the chwray kwtharni lanpra puja, no other puja is performed in the house.

Chuchu bwswlwy (a mixute of turmeric, rice, and seeds), broom, rusambi (a flat bamboo made strip used in their traditional loom) are kept in the masumwra nog (maternity house). After touching the baby with the rusambi, it is kept under the bed so that the evil spirit can not do any harm to the baby.

One can touch the newly born baby only after touching the fire kept in the maternity house. It means that the baby should not be touched in a state of impurity.

If the breastmilk of the mother does not appear within five days of delivery a ceremony called aboktwy khangmwng or bimwng (wanting of milk) is performed. This ceremony is conducted by the female members of the family. It is held in the evening and supply of milk for the baby is wished.

In this ceremony seven cakes are prepared with the powder of atap rice and an amount of water is added to some rice powder and stired to look like milk. Then this white mixture is boiled in a pot and those cakes dropped into it. Then the liquid and the cakes are offered as naibadya in the name of the seven deities.

These seven deities who are sisters are called bukhuk sini. These seven sisters are also known as 'swkal'. Their names are: 1. Dakini, 2. Jogini, 3. Mogini, 4. Khagini, 5. Lohari, 6. Prohori, and 7. Premsori.

The ceremony is officiated by the Ochay. Seven naibadyas are offered on banana leaves in the courtyard. After the completion of the Puja the Ochay is required to ask the mother 'has the milk appeared for the baby?'The assistants of her reply 'yes', 'yes', it has appeared. It has filled up the jars. The Ochay again asks 'is it true?' They reply yes it is true. Then the ceremony ends.

Barrenness:

The general notion of the Jamatiyas towards barren men and women is that they are deprived of the grace of the god. They should not take active part in many of the socio-religious functions. It is considered inauspicious to see the face of a barren man or woman early in the morning at the time of getting up from bed and at the time of departure for an important work.

The jamatiyas perform certain pujas in order to cure one of barrenness. This puja is performed in a twysa (canal) and the puja is officiated by the Ochay (Priest). This puja is known as twysa-baauw (barrenness removing puja). The number of persons present in the puja should be seven. After the completion of the puja all persons present except the Ochay take the prasad.

The woman is forbidden to take or use the water of that twysa (small canal). Only when the son of that woman grows up and feeds his mother with the fish caught from that twysa the restriction put on her will be lifted.

Marriage:

The Jamatiyas attach some degree of religious values in the performance of marriage ceremony on the part of a man or woman. So some special privileges and importance are generally given to the married persons in their society.

The Jamatiya society is patriarchal and patrilineal. It is an endogamous tribe. Monogamy is the ideal and general rule. In case of barrenness, death, divorce etc. a person may marry a second wife.

The average age for marriage of the Jamatiyas living in the interrior and backward villages differ from that of those living in the advanced and urbanized villages. In the backward area child marriage is still prevailing in a large scale and the birde is senior to the bridegroom in respect of age. The average age of marriage varies from 12 to 16 in case of males and 15 to 18 in case of females. Regarding the age range of the girls their view is that the girls should be physically fit for agricultural and domestic work before their marriage. Among the educated Jamatiyas adult marriage is the general rule. In this kind the average age varies from 20 to 25 years incase of males and 15 to 20 years in case females. Here the bride is generally junior to the groom in respect of age.

Except the months of Chaitra (March-April), Vadra (August-September), and Pous (December-January) marriage may be performed in all the nine months. The month of Magh (January-February) is considered as the best month for marriage ceremony. Marriage may be fixed on any day except the time of Purabjogini. Most of the marriages are performed in the second half of the morning. It should be noted here that the Jamatiyas put emphasis on an auspicious date according to the Panjika (almanac).

For the purpose of marriage ceremony, the Jamatiyas prepare two pandals with bamboo. One pandal is for worshipping of the fourteen gods, and the other is for the functioning of the marriage ceremony. A haiya (altar) is constructed at the centre of the marriage pandal.

Types of Marriage:

There are two types of marriage current among the Jamatiyas. The first type is marriage by service, a system in which the groom lives at his father in law's house. It is known as Chawmrwy nahomwng/nahomani. According to their custom, after marriage the bridegroom has to stay for a minimum period of two years in his father in law's house. Generally, the father in law gives him a separate house and land for this purpose.

Such a type of marriage is known by the following three names which have certain special characteristics. These names are:

- 1. Chamwrwy Tisamani or Chamwrwy tisamwng.
- 2. Chamwrwy nahomani or Chamwrwy nahomwng.
- 3. Chamwrwy kamani.

The second type of marriage is known as hanjwk nahomani or hanjwk nahomwng and hanjwk rohomani or hanjwk rohomwng. Under this system, the marriage ceremony is performed in the bride grooms' house. In this system, the marriage proposal is initiated by the groom's side. The biride's side calls this marriage as hanjwk rohomwng (Sending of the bride). On the other hand the groom's side calls this system of marriage as hanjwk nahomani/hanjwk nahomwng (accepting of the bride).

Now a days, due to the influence of modern education, urbanization etc. a new trend has also been developed in their society. In this system the marriage is held in the bride's house and on the next day the groom returns home with his newly married wife. This is however relatively infrequent and confined to a few urbanized and educated persons.

Marriage Regulations:

Cross cousin marriage as well as parallel cousin marriage is forbidden. Marriage within the blood relationship up to three generations from the maternal side but from the father's side up to santay's side is also restricted.

A Jamatiya is restricted to marry his younger or elder brother's widow and the elder sister of his wife. On the other hand there is no bar in marrying one's wifes younger sister. A widower is required to marry a widow and a widow is also required to marry a widower.

In the Jamatiya community the system of bride-price has been in existence since time immemorial in the form of marriage by service. The practice of dowry is seldom found.

The system of exchange of garlands and scattering of flowers at weeding is not in existence among them.

Divorce (Kaglaymwng):

The rate of divorce is quite high among the Jamatiyas. Divorce can be sought on the ground of madness, impotance, barrenness, adultery and being quarrelsome to the moyol panchay (Head of the regional Council) of that region. According to custom the party which divorces has to pay the fees of divorce (Which is six score rupees i.e. Rs. 120/- six adhulies (six fifty paise), six sikies (six twenty five paisa), six duanies (six twelve paise) and six anies. Thus the total amount stands as Rs. 125.68 to the moyol panchay.

In case of divorce of a couple with children, the husband rarely demands the children to be with him. It is a common picture in the Jamatiya community that, after divorce the minor children stay with their mother.

It is also a custom that if a person marries a divorced woman or a widow with children, then though these children may address him as father, they do not get the share of property of their foster father.

Rites connected with the disposal of the Dead Body:

The rites connected with the disposal of the dead body varies from place to place to an extent. The cropse is washed with warm water and rubbed with oil and then wrapped with a piece of new cloth. The clan members and relatives carry the cropse to the cremation ground and the funeral pyre is made and a arranged by them.

Before lighting the funeral pyre cooked rice is offered to the dead body with the curry of fish, egg or meat of pigeon. The sons then go round the dead and the eldest son does the lighting of the mouth of the cropse with his left hand first of all and then other sons and relatives offer fire one by one in the same manner. It should be noted that the eldest son is to start the lighting first. After the completion of cremation all after taking bath return to the house of the dead. A chopper, turmeric, tulshi leaf (holy basil), a small water pot containing water and fire prepared with fire wood are kept ready. All of them touch all these articles and return home.

On the next day some of the clan members go to the cremation ground and collect the residual bone of the cremated body and put it into a bamboo tube. The tube is wrapped with a white piece of cloth and placed in the courtyard sourrounded by a covered fencing. The enclosed space is called bari. Since that day the sons of the dead wear dhorna (a piece of cloth from which a piece of iron hangs. This cloth is worn round the neck.) Then one of the sons, usually the eldest one, or the younges t one or with the permission of the eldest one, any other son offers puja in the 'bari' daily till the sradho ceremony is held. The other sons simply observe fast.

The relatives of the dead who are not his kinsman perform the Sradha ceremony after three nights. But the santays (belonging to the same lineage) perform the sradhad on the thirteenth day. The sons of the dead shave their heads one day previous to the day of sraddha ceremony. On the day of the sraddha ceremony the dharna is united from the neck. Religious songs are sung on the night of the sraddha ceremony.

After the completion of the sraddho ceremony, the period of taking vegetarian food is ended by taking bodas prepared with the leaves of bitter tasting vegetable e.g. young leaves of korola (balsam apple), dimy (a kind of pot herb) etc. amount of fried dehydrated fish and rice powder. In this way the ceremony of sraddho is ended.

It may be mentioned here that in case of unnatural death the sraddho ceremony is performed on the third day.

Children below eighteen months of age are not cremated, they are burried.

In case of the death of a pregnant woman the foetus is taken out from the womb of the mother. Then the mother is cremated and the foetus is burried.

Traditional dress, ornaments and handicrafts of the Jamatiyas.

The traditional dress and ornaments and the pattern of wearing the same by the Jamatiya women is similiar to those of the Tripuris and many other tribal communities of Tripura. Most of the Jamatiya women still weave their own clothes. Their handloom clothes are beautifully designed and longlasting. Among their garments the riinanyborok (a piece of cloth for covering the lower part of the body-waist downwards), the riisa (a piece of cloth to cover the breasts of the girls) are worth mentioning. But dresses of the men is similiar to those of the neighbouring Bengalees. Men wear dhuti, shirt, vests etc. The use of Kanchwlwy borok (a kind of traditional jacket worn at the time of agricultural work) is very common among them.

In the past, the Jamatiya women were very fond of various kinds of ornaments. The ornaments used by them were rangbwtang (a chain or thread studded with coins for wearing round their necks), brindabonful (a kind of brass or silver ear rings), boliya (a kind of thick bangle made of different metals), sanggeyng (a kind of metal made hair clip used in their bun) etc. But the above mentioned traditional ornaments have been abandoned by them for a long time.

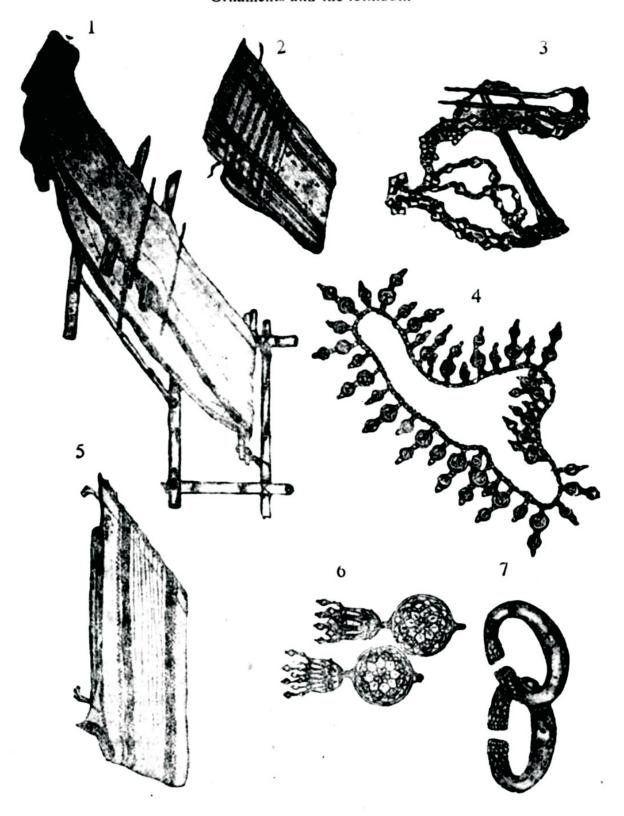

Bamboo holds an important role in the Jamatiya community. In fact, bamboo is so indispensible in their life that their daily life cannot be thought of without bamboo. They make different articles of daily use with bamboo which distinctly bears the high standard of Jamatiya craftmanship. The various bamboo made articles of the Jamatiyas are as follows:

- 1. langa (a kind bamboo made basket used for carrying articles from one place to another).
- 2. Chenpay (smaller than langa in size mostly used for carrying different articles to the Jhum).
- Khuturuk (a kind of bamboo made basket used for storing valuable articles).
- 4. Tisiyng (A kind of langa with gaps in the waves used for carrying firewood, green vegetables, pitcher etc.).
- 5. Dul (a kind of large hollow shaped bamboo basket used for storing paddy).
- 6. Bayliyng (a kind of bamboo made winnowing-fan used for winnowing grain).
- 7. Wasung (a kind of bamboo made tube used as a container of different kinds of cooking articles).

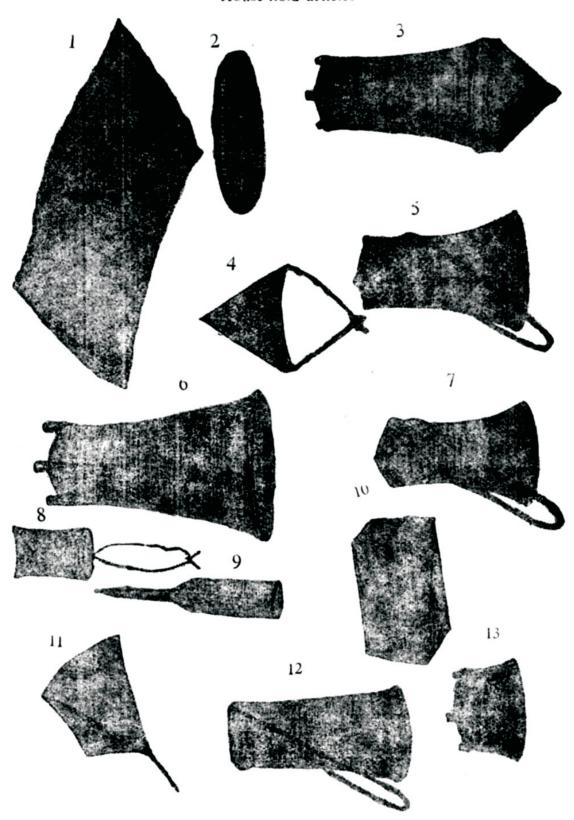

Besides the use of above mentioned articles they are also skilled in making various kinds of articles to catch fish. The tools are as follows:

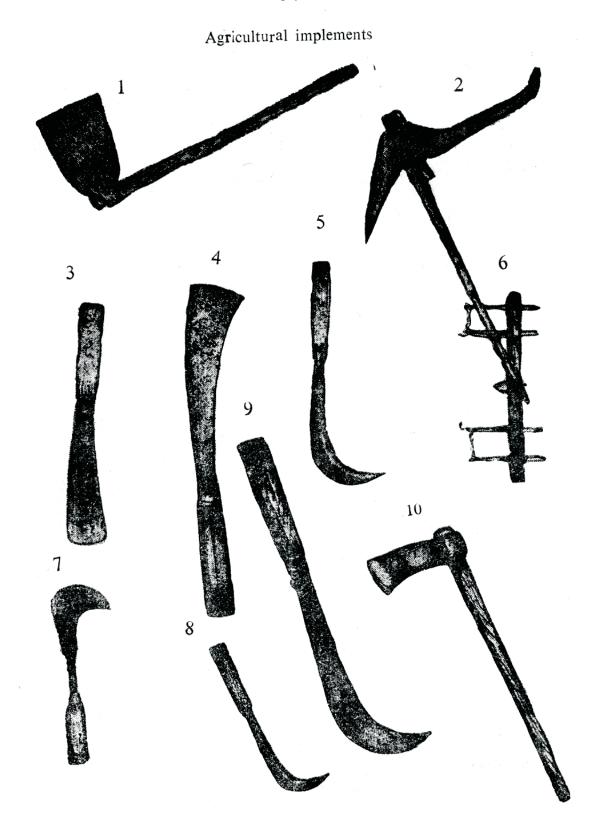

- 1. Socheying (a round shaped bamboo made box to trap fish).
- 2. Jurukha (a funnel shaped fish trap).
- 3. Sudan (a kind of fishing net made from bamboo strips).

WINE AND THE JAMATIYAS

Wine plays a very important role in the life of the Jamatiyas. It is closely associated with their socio-religious life. The arrangement for the preparation of wine is found in almost every Jamatiya house. Generally the women are skilled in it. In their traditional religious rites and functions the Ochay offers wine to the angry evil spirits in order to propitiate them. Some times the Ochay is offered wine instead of cash as fees for their services. Besides this, if one has to make a compliant to the chokdiri (head of the village council) against some body and seeks justice he must offer wine as fee. Above all it is used as an important item of hospitality. Guests are entertained with wine.

Wine is also taken as medicine for a lot of ailments. It is used as a medicine itself or as ingredient of other medicines. In the cases of catarrh, cold and fever, sting of various kinds of insects, stomach troubles etc. Wine is taken as an effective medicine. A mother after child birth is given chuwan (an essential ingredient to prepare wine) mixed with warm water. In cases of swelling in any part of the body chuwa is made into a paste by mixing water the paste is then warmed and applied on the affected place. Besides this, bwrwyrog, burasa who are considered responsible for various diseases are worshipped with wine by their Ochay.

There are various categories of wine and they are known by different names. The two main categories of wine are known as Chok or arak (refined wine which is preserved in bottles) and panchwa (unrefined wine which is prepared in an earthen jar and taken with a bamboo pipe). Panhwa is known by different names mostly according to the name of the container.

For example when panchwa is taken from a small sized earthen vessel it is known as bwtwk; when the same panchwa from a bigger container i.e. from an earthen jar (darwkay) it is knwon as darwkay; when the panchwa is taken from a still bigger container i.e. thila (a big jar with a bulging belly) it is called thila. Of course when the quantity of Panchwa is half or less than half of a thila it is called gora.

Chuwan:

It is an essential ingredient to prepare wine. It is the main fermenting agency. The bark of chuwanthwy tree and the leaf of chuwanlay tree and sunned rice are required to prepare chuwan. Besides this, jackfruit leaf, sugar can leaf, mwkhwra ata leaf etc. are also added to them for the taste of the wine. All these articles are just pounded into a powdery form and then made into round tablets by mixing water. The tablets are dried in the sun.

Bwtwk:

For the preparation of bwtwk rice is boiled in a pan. The bwtwk prepared from the awamaymi rice is very tasteful and considered as the best of its kind. Then the boiled rice is spread over a dari (a kind of bamboo made mat) to cool off. The powder of a chuwan tablet is mixed with this rice and preserved in a bwtwk or darwkay or thila. The mouth of the container is covered with a banana leaf. This chuwan mixed rice is called chokman. Generally the rice ferments within two days and two nights. After fermentation drinking water is poured into the container and the juice (panchwan) of the chokman is sucked with a bamboo tube (chungi).

There is a rule regarding the quantity of panchwan in social drinking. The wine is drunk from a common pot by means of pipes. Every one must have an equal quantity of the drink.

There is a technique to ensure this quantity. A bamboo strip is placed horizontally on the mouth of the container of the panchwan and a portion of the strip in pulled back to the middle of it and is pushed into the container vertically. This strip functions as an indicator and is known as tiyngi. A man stops drinking as soon as the level of the drink falls below the end of the indicator. A man acts as an umpire. He sees to one does not drink more than his share. When one's turn is finished the umpire pours water to bring the drink to original level. In this way every body takes his due share one by one according to the seniority of the age.

When both the men and women drink at gathering men first takes the drink one by one according to the seniority of age. When the men have drunk the women begins.

During the time of group drinking the first person to take the drink salutes others with folded hands before taking the drink saying 'Jottono khulunbay jakha' meaning 'I salute every body'. Others say 'Kwtwy khelay di/kwtwy Khelay thwng' meaning 'let the wine be sweet'.

Chok/arak:

For the preparation of chok/arak first of all chokman is put into an earthen pot known as baatiwa. Another earthen pot known as baatikhorok with a hole on the back is placed up side down on the mouth of the baatiwa. The point where the two pots join is covered with the mixture of chokman and mud to make it air tight so that the steam does not come out. Then one end of a bamboo tube '(Soboso) is fitted to the hole of the baatikhorok. Here also the leak of the joining is closed with chokman and mud.

The other end of the bamboo tube is inserted to a container called patni where the wine is stored. Then the chokman is brewed and the vapour comes out through the bamboo tube (soboso) and deposited into the patni and then wine of the patni is packed in bottles. Thus through the distillation process the chokman is brewed and wine is prepared.

Customs of Wine drinking:

At the time of community drinking the importance is given to equality. Every body should have equal share irrespective personal demand or capacity to consume the drink.

In case of chok drinking if it is found that after the distribution of one cup of chok to each person if some quantity of the wine is left over some more quantity of wine is added to it and then it is distributed again. In case the host is unable to supply extra quantity of the wine, the left over is not utilised.

CHAPTER III

POLITICAL LIFE

The traditional administrative system of the Jamatiyas is democratic in nature. The mechanism of their social control is so well organised that the violation of their customary law is seldom found in their community. Any kind of difficulty or problem is met with joint decision taken by them. The whole Jamatiya community is socially controlled by their hoda (The Supeme council).

For the decentralisation of the power of the hoda, it is divided into three distinct separate units. These are:

- i) Luku (Village level Council)
- ii) Moyol (Regional level Council)
- iii) Hoda (Community level Supreme Council)

Besides these three tier system of administration there is an Advisory Committee of eight executive members drawn from all over Jamatiya community.

The village Council (Luku):— The village Council mainly consists of one headman (Chokdiri) and two or more assistants (Khandols). Usually chokdiri is directly elected by the senior male members of the luku. The essential qualifications for the post of the Chokdiri is that he should be a married person with wife and children and should be economically sound. He is the formal spokesman of the village.

The village council deals only with the minor socio-economic disputes of the village. Justice is done according to the traditional rule. In case of any dispute, the Chokdiri takes the help of the old and influential members of the Village who constitute the jury. The Chokidiri maintains good relation with the moyol panchay and the hoda okra. He participates or sends two representatives (adongs) in the annual supreme Council meeting (agon kokmalaymwng). He supervises all sorts of social functions like marriage, death or any other rituals and also looks after the welfare of the village.

Regional Council (Moyol):— The moyol is the next higher level administrative organisation to the luku. A regional Council consists of 30 to 50 village Councils of a compact geographical area. There are two headmen (moyol panchay) in each regional Council. They are elected by the adongs of all the lukus under that particular moyol.

The moyol panchays should also be a married persons with wife and children. He maintains law and order and the welfare of the region. They are empowered to decide all kinds of inter village disputes of the region with the help of the Chokdiris. But his judgement is not final. He may send a case to hoda okra for final judgement.

The moyol panchays of Kalyanpur and Raimasharma have been vested with exceptional powers. In certain specific cases, their judgement is final. Of course, they have to inform the hoda okra of these cases during the next annual conference of the hoda.

Supreme Coancil:— Hoda is the Supreme Council of the Jamatiya community. The head of the hoda is called hoda-okra. Previously there was only one hoda-okra for the entire Jamatiya community. Later on the system of two okras was introduced for the two divisions of the territory e.g. Amarpur and Udaipur. The two okras are elected by the adongs of each village Council (luku) in the annual conference ((agon kokmalaymwng) which is held in the month of Agrahayana. The okras are generally elected for a period of five years.

As regards the qualifications for the post of an okra, he must be religious minded well known personality with adequate experience of the functions of their traditional administrative organisations and customery laws.

He should also be acquainted with their customs and impartial in his treatment towards all. He should also be a married man with wife and children.

The hoda-okra is the formal spokesman of the entire Jamatiya community. His verdict is final. The function of the hoda is to arrange some festivals like Goriya Puja, Balangswamani, Gang Puja etc. for the welfare of the entire Jamatiya community. Besides the religious function the hoda has judicial functions too. All kinds of cases like divorce, adultery, kidnapping, anti-social activities and complicated cases which could not be solved by the village Council and regional Council are dealt with by the okra. The hoda is the highest Court of appeal vested with highest degree of legislative, administrative and judicial powers.

Advisory Council (Upadesta Committee):— Besides the three tier system of administration of the Jamatiyas, there is an advisory Council consisting of eight executive members. It is a later development in their community. The aim regarding the creation of this advisory Committee is to give an opportunity to the young and educated Jamatiyas to enter this Committee and to reflect their modern and scientific out look in their community. This Council also acts as a check on the dictatorial tendencies of the okras.

Procedure:— On a complaint lodged by an individual of their community, the complainant has to offer one bottle of beverage or Re 1/- to Chokdiri as a fee. Then the headman fixed a date, time and place for the meeting. Usually meeting is held in the Chokdiri's house. Both the parties assemble with witness. The headman (may be Chokdiri, Sardar or Okras) and some elder persons constitute the Jury. Meeting is called by the Khandol in the evening. The headman takes his seats and directs the complainant to place his case before the assembly. After hearing the complains the headman asks the accused to defend himself. Then the witnesses are asked to give their statements. Then the members of the Jury discuss the pros and cons of the case among themselves.

The Council punishes an offender by different ways as fine in cash or kind, astricises on a person from the village or society and so on. Punishment to the female offender is sympathetically considered. Fine in cash is a recent development. In the past, lashing with a cane stick was in practice. The money collected through fine is utilised in the common festivals. The mechanism of Social control is so organised and strict that violation of law is few in number in the Jamatiya society. When the Chokdiri fails to settle any case or his judgement is not accepted to either of the parties, the case is referred to the moyol panchay which in turn sends it to a non-related village Council for settlement. But the Panchay's judgement is not final even here and one can appeal against his judgement to the Supreme Council. The okras do not call a meeting in their houses. He selects any village Council as a place for hearing of the case. In this matter the moyol Panchay and the Chokdiri to whose jurisdiction the case originally belonged must be present during the trial of the case.

The following list bears the name of the okras since the founding of the Supreme Council. Owing to the absence of any writen decument, it is very difficult to prepare a complete chronological list of the okras. Even then on the memories of the elederly persons of their community, the following list has been prepared:—

CHAPTER IV RELIGION

During the Census of 1911, 1961 and 1901 the entire Jamatiya population returned themselves as Hindus. The Census reports in connection with their religion is furnished below:

Persons during the Census Years

Census Year:	1901	1911	1961
Total:	4,910	178	24,359
Hindu	4,910	178	24,359

It has been mentioned in the 'Tribes of Tripura' that the Jamatiyas are Hindus. The present day Jamatiya religion may be characterised as a mixed type of Vaishnavism and animism. They are divided into two sects vaishnavas and Saktas. Many of them are Vaishanva mendicants who are called sadhus.

Shri Somendra Chandra Deb Barma states in the Book 'Tripura Rajyer Census Bibarani' that the religiousness of the Jamatiyas is appreciable. They are the followers of Sakta doctrine. They accepted 'Vishnu Mantra' under the guidance of the 'Goswamis'. In the Census of this year 10,287 Saktas and 803 Vaishnavas are found in their community. All of them use mala and chandan. They think it as their duty to go on a pilgrimage every year and usually visits holy places like Kashi (Varanasi) Brindaban etc. Harisankirtan (Singing of the holy songs of the god Hari) is considered as one of the most important religious duties among them.

The Jamatiyas accepted Vaishnavism during the reign of Maharaja Birchandra Manikya (1861-1896). The 1931 Census report mentions how they came to embrace Vaishnavism. During the reign of Maharaja Birchandra Manikya there was an official named Oakiray Hazari who was very cruel and tyranical. The Jamatiyas rose in revolt against his oppression in 1862 under the leadership of Parikshit Jamatiya. The Maharaja succeeded in crushing the rebellion with the help of the Darlongs (one of tribes of Tripura). Birchandra, however, did not punish the leader and spared his life. Touched by this gesture of generosity the Sardar accepted Vaishnavism and promised to follow the customs of Vaishnavism. After that, the whole community came to accept Vaishnavism. So this armed rebellion of the Jamatiyas was turned into a cultural revolution by Birchandra.

It should be noted here that as a result of embracing Vaishnavism they gave up eating of pig, begun to wear sacrad thread (Paitha) and started to appoint Brahmin priests for the performance of their religious functions. They consider the Ramayana, the Mahavarata and the Gita as their holy books.

Besides the worshipping of many deities of Hindu belief such as Kali, Durga, Saraswati etc. and observance of many rituals connected with birth and death, they also perform their traditional pujas like the Goriya Puja, Lanpra Puja, Maylwngma Puja, Khulwngma Puja etc. It should be mentioned here that their traditional pujas are officiated by their traditional priest (Ochay) and non-traditional Pujas may be performed by a Brahmin priest. In their religious affairs there is synthesis of Vaishnavism, Saktaism and their traditional system of worship. Their religious beliefs may be termed as polytheistic. Animism or rather spiritism is an important factor of the Jamatiya religion. One of the objects of their puja is to obtain immunity from any unwarranted form of danger. They perform these pujas only for obtaining immediate results.

The deities, spirits and other supernatural agencies which are worshipped by the Jamatiyas may be divided into the following two categories:

- 1. The worship of the deities which have come from their traditional puja, are the Lanprapuja the Maylwngma puja, the Khulwngma puja, the Noksu Puja, the Burasa Puja, the Bwrwyrag Puja, the Mahadeb and Madev Puja, Chouddo devata Puja, Mwy tanmwng or twymankermwng, Kuwaychanayma etc.
- 2. The worship of the deities which have been borrowed from the neighbouring castes and communities as a result of acculturation are the Durga Puja, the Sani Puja, the Trinath Puja, the Laxmi Puja, the Saraswati Puja, the Rakshakali Puja, the Rathajatra Festival, the Janmastami festival etc.

Given below are the brief descriptions of a few traditional and non traditional pujas and religious functions of the Jamatiyas:—

I. GORIYA PUJA

Goriya Puja has a deeply rooted significance on the socio-political and religious life of the Jamatiyas. In order to understand the religious life of the Jamatiyas one must have a clear cut idea of the role of the Goriya Puja in their society. Goriya is considered to be a benevolent male deity and fulfiller of the desires of his worshippers. Goriya is dear to them and the puja is performed socially. Unlike all other Kagbarak speaking tribes of Tripura, the Jamatiyas perform this as a community festival.

Every year, the Goriya Puja starts from the day of Mahabishu Sankranti i.e. from the last day of the Bengali month of Chaitra (March-April) and continues for seven days and seven nights. The day on which the Goriya Puja starts is called buiso by them.

There is no fixed place for the puja. The Puja is performed in an open Courtyard. From time to time the venue of the Puja is changed with the consent of the villages changing over and taking over the Puja. The place of the Puja is declared formally in the annual conference of the hoda.

At first only one image of Goriya was worshipped. Lateron, since Pub Narayan's bringing of the image of Goriya from the land of the Kukis, the worship of two images began among them. And from that period the original image is now known as elder brother of Goriya and is called by various names such as Biyakwrwy Goriya or Bwlaykwrwy Goriya. On the otherhand the image brought by Pub Narayan is known as younger brother of Goriya and is called by the names such as biyagwnang Goriya or bwlay-gwnang Goriya.

The image of the Biyakwrwy Goriya is a piece of bamboo. On the other-hand the image of the Biyagwnang Goriya is a three tier bamboo structure which is considered to be limbs of the image. Of course, recently the design of the image of the Biyakwrwy Goriya has been changed and now it is a single tier.

The image of the biyagwnang Goriya is taken out in procession from the Puja pandal. On the otherhand the image of the Biyakwrwy Goriya is not taken out in procession.

The officials required for this puja are selected during the annual conference of the hoda. These officials are:

- 1. Kherfang: It is a hereditary post. The two kherfangs for the two images are selected from the two separate Kaherfang lineages e.g. Biyakwrwy and Biyagwnang Goriya. The head of the image and all other materials of the Goriya are preserved in the house of the Kherfang. The annual puja is held in the Kherfang's house.
- 2. Ochay: The main priest of the hoda. The hoda ochay is selected in the annual Conference of the hoda.
- 3. Mwtay balnay: The bearer of the image of Goriya.
- 4. Doriya: He is the drum beater of the Goriya.
- 5. Bogla: Compainions of the Goriya.
- 6. Bhandari: Store-keeper of the puja.

For the construction of the image six persons go to the nearby forest wearing sacrad garments to collect three spotless bamboos. The detection of the spotless bamboos is done in a special spiritual manner which is called pathkarmwng. Then a bhog (offering) is given under the spotless bamboo and cut this by a single stroke while holding his breath. This bamboo is called watwy fang raja. The other two are cut in an ordinary manner. Then the mwtay balnay cuts the bamboo and the image is constructed and covered with white thread and cloth.

The pandal of the puja is constructed in the courtyard. It is made of bamboo and decorated with their hand -woven risa, dhuti etc. A trident is embedded in the ground at a distance of one cubit away from the image of Goriya. Beside this trident twenty others weighing each about of 10 K.G. are also fixed. These tridents are eight to nine cubits long. A boundary line leading from these tridents to the fencing is marked by two white threads. Admission within the precincts of this boundary at the time of the puja is prohibited. Only the officials of the Puja have admission in this area. Before the commencement of the Puja the ochay, mwtaybalnay and the doriya sprinkle water sanctified by mantra in this area.

On the first day of the puja, an image of the Goriya is prepared with rice paste. After reciting the mantra, the Ochay performs the rite of inspiriting it. Then a naibadya is offered to this image. Then a naibadya is offered to bamboo made image by the Ochay. A sacrad thread is also placed on the shoulder of this image. Then the image is handed over to the mwtaybalnay and he approaches the Kherfang. The doriya then beat drum and follow him along with the disciples.

Then the mwtaybalnay goes round a bangchay (An altar cosisting of Tulsih (holy basil) and some other sacard plants) thrice. Then the officials of the puja and some distinguished persons wash the feet of Goriya.

Then bhogs are offered by present disciples. The puja begins at eight to nine A.M. The sacrificing function begins with buffalo and he-goat offered by the hoda. Next comes the sacrificing of buffaloes and he-goats offered by the disciples. The sacrificing of a buffalo must be accompanied by the killing of a he-goat and a new napkin.

After the performance of the puja the officials of Goriya go to a seperate room allotted to them for taking meals. At the time of taking of meal also they are to observe certain customs and taboos. The cook is also required to observe purity in this period. In this way they take their meals for seven days. During the time of their taking meals entrance of any outsider is strictly prohibited. After taking their meals they wash their hand and mouth, take their respective seats and take kuway fatwy and duma. Here also the Ochay is required at accept first.

Then the officials take rest for an hour. Then at about 3 P.M. they start to carry Goriya to the Scheduled villages. In case of impurity in any village, Goriya is not taken to that particular village.

The villagers welcome the followers of image of Goriya in its movement cordially. The owner of the house tries his level best to satisfy them. In this way they go from house to house, from village to village with the image of Goriya dancing for five to ten minutes in each house and then bless the owner of the house. This continues for seven days and seven nights.

The role of the boglas, who are regarded as friends or companions of Gariya is very significant. They accompany the image during its movement. They make jokes with the spectators and the followers. The leader of the Boglas is called mohonta. The boglas sing many sex erotic songs. Of course the pranks of the boglas are just not taken seriously. If any spectator requests the mohanta to cure him or her of an ailment, he takes a little water and chants some mantras on it and gives the patient. Some times he simply tells the patient 'ta wanadi' (don't worry) and the patient gets cured.

At the end of the seven days and seven nights the image is again taken to the Kherfang's house. Then certain religious functions are done. Lastly, the Ochay tells the latest result of the puja to anyone of the officials of the Goriya. The Mwtaybalnay then ask all to immerse the image of Goriya.

Before immersion all the clothes of the image of Goriya are taken off. At that time many jatris (Followers of the Goriya) treasure pieces of clothing removed from the image of Goriya as souvenir and blessings. It should be mentioned here that the seventh day of Baishak i.e. the day of the immersion of the image of Goriya is an auspicious day to them. Sena Puja and the puja of maylwngma and Khulwngma are also performed on that day.

2. Lanpra Puja:

The Lanpra puja has an important place in the religious life of the Jamatiyas. It is done at different stages of life, birth, marriage and death for the welfare purposes. This puja signifies the dissolvement of all kinds of impurity or the termination of a period of mourning. Before the start of any new venture or for the success of any important event, as for example before finalising a marriage, contructing a new house they perform this puja. The Ochay officiates this puja.

The lanpra puja is performed in two different manners, 1. By sacrificing a fowl and 2. by offering naibadya. At present the practice of offering of nabidya is in vogue in their community. The article generally required for this puja are banana, sugar pole (batasa), ataprice etc. Generally the fees of the Ochay is not paid in cash. He is offered chok (wine) to drink.

The term langra is derived from the Jamatiya word lama meaning way or path and Pra meaning junction. So langra literally means the junction of roads. The six deities that are worshiped in the langra puja are:

1. Akatha; 2. Bikatha; 3. Twybuk; 4. Sangrang; 5. Sukundray and 6. Mukundray.

3. Maylwngma and Khulwngma:

The common family deity of the Jamatiyas is maylwngma and Khulwngma. Both of them are female deities. M : lwngma presides over crops and Khulwngma is the deity of cotton. For the performance of the maylwngma and Khulwngma puja two earthen pots are filled with newly harvested Jhum rice. The pots are decorated with rice paste and tied with hand made cotton. Some times a swastika symbol is drawn with vermillion of the earthen pots. Some egg shaped pabbles painted with vermillion are also placed within these earthen pots. These earthen pots are placed in a neat and clean portion of the house. They offer flower and light candles sincerely infront of the pots of maylwngma and khulwngma. The earthen pots are called rondok. The puja is performed twice in a year. The first one is performed on the day of sena puja (the day on which the image of the Goriya is immersed.) The second one is celebrated on the first day of eating new rice.

4. The mwytanmwng Puja

(Worship of river or stream):

Mwytangmwng or Twyman Puja is a socio-religious function of the Jamatiyas. It is performed by the luku, moyol and hoda and also by certain individual households, for the welfare of the members within the jurisdiction. Of the above level organisations. The puja which is held in luku level is known luku samwng and the puja which performed by household level is called nukhung samwng. In the community level puja one buffalo is sacrificed on the bank of the Bijoy river of Bishalgarh, one on the Gomoti river, one on the Khowai river, and one at matabari (Tripura Sundari temple of Udaipur). Besides them one buffalo is sacrificed in the puja of each regional level organisation. In the village level and household level pujas male-goats are sacrificed.

5. The Ker Puja :

The Ker is performed in order to protect the people of a particular area from disease, anxiety, epidemic etc. It can take place on any saturday or tuesday. Unlike Goriya Puja, it is full of restrictions. The puja is officiated by an Ochay. The chief characteristic of the Ker is mudra which indicates binding or fastening with seal of an area. During the puja the villagers are restricted to light an oven, they are not supposed cross the boundary of Ker.

According to the time and purpose of the worship of the Ker, it may be divided into various names. Some of these are as follows:

1. Saon Puja, 2. Agan Puja, 3. Chaitra Cheynggwra, 4. Special Ker or mudra.

The Saon Puja is performed by the hoda (community level organisation) for the protection of the people from scarcity.

The Agan Puja or Bolong Katerama is performed by the hoda for the protection of those who practice Jhuming in the forest.

Chaitra cheynggwra is performed to protect the villagers from various diseases like cholera, pox etc.

Special Ker or Mudra: It is performed if any village or any family thereof is in danger due to the outbreak of small pox, cholera, etc. The puja is also performed when outbreak of small Pox or cholera epidemic usually starts or are apprehended. Besides this the people of the Village can also perform this puja if there is any possibility of external aggression of the village by its neighbouring villages. This puja acts as a safeguard of the village and it protects the village from internal disturbances & external aggression.

Generally this Ker or mudra is performed in the morning time. Like general Ker Puja, this special Ker or mudra is also held on the Saturday or Tuesday.

Generally, a naibadya is offered in this puja. The following articles are required for the puja, viz. atap rice, sugar, sugar pole, banana and seasonal fruits. In this puja atap rice is a must and at least one coconut must be given. The Ochay officiates the puja. In this puja mustered seeds & green turmeric is also required though this is not offered alongwith the naibadya. A slight variation of articles are prescribed by the different Ochays for this puja.

Rules and Regulations:

On the day of the worship, all the members of the family must remain in their house. According to the rule of this puja, if any member of the family remains absent this puja can not be performed. If this puja is observed by any individual house, then no member of the other family should be present during this puja.

But if this Ker is performed by a village collectively for the safety of the village, then all the outsider of the village are prevented from entering the village during the performance of this puja. There is a slight difference of opinion among the three groups of Ochays regarding the restriction on movement in connection with this puja. According to the view of the first group of Ochays just after completion of the Puja, the outsiders may be allowed in the village and the villagers may be allowed to go outside the village. On the other hand according to the view of the 2nd group of the Ochays, a full day restriction on movement is necessary. But the 3rd group of Ochays is of the opinion that 3 days restriction on movement should be observed. However, the above mentioned restriction on movement depends on the decision of the officiating Ochay. There is no single opinion in this respect. During the period of this puja nobody of the village can sleep or spend their night outside the village and no outsider can come and sleep in this village. This puja is again performed in case if any breach in the restrictions take place or for lapse in the rules of the puja. On the day of the puja, from the morning till the completion of it, nobody can go outside of his house for his daily works. Untill the completion of the puja, nobody can husk paddy or wash his clothes or cut trees. Ochay has to observe fast to officiate this puja.

For the performance of the puja, 3 (three) bamboo made platforms are prepared on the water of the main cherra (stream) of the villages. These platforms are made in a line. Out of this 3 platforms the platform which stands on the up stream (which faces the upstream) is the main platform of this Ker. The 3rd platform stands on the down side on the stream i.e. it faces the downside of the stream. The 4 poles of the main platform are to be decorated with flowers, wood apple leaves and garlends. In this puja, they draw a picture of the Goddess Kali on a paper and 5 other separate pictures of the 4 guards of the goddess Kali and then place the picture of the goddess Kali just in the middle of her 4 guards on the main platform. The Ochay comes to perform the Puja after taking his bath and prepares the naibadya, first. After getting everything ready the Ochay starts the Puja. First, he worships the main platform. Then the second one. At last, he performs the puja of the third platform. Naibadya (Bhog) is offered to all the (3 three) platforms. The 3rd platform is called in their language twyswkal (evil spirit of water). The bhog of this platform is not distributed among the villagers because, nobody takes it. The bhog of the 2 other platforms are distributed among the villagers. After be completion of the puja the faces of the 4 guards of the goddess Kali are turned to opposite direction. It should be mentioned here that, those, who bring the picture of the goddess Kali after the completion of the puja from the platform must keep silent, they should not speak or laugh. Generally 4 persons carry the 4 pictures to this platforms. When any of the 4 persons who carried the pictures to the worshipping platform comes back, the n they declare that the puja is over. Then they carry the prasads to the house of the chokdiri of the village and distribute it. Every one of the village take the prasad. So they send these prasads to all the houses of the village.

In the evening, some Ochays at the end of the puja sprinkle the mixture of atap rice, green turmeric and mustared seeds which are sanctified by mantras (purify), in all the houses of the village. This mixture is called suchubwchwlwy. This is done for the protection of the villagers from evil forces. One person sprinkles it as representative of the Ochay by his consent, but during the moment of sprinkling this person engaged in sprinkling must keep mum.

Before sprinkling, they ask all the families of the village to keep the front and back doors of their house open, for sprinkling this purified articles in inside and outside of the house.

This is not their annual festival but this is a special festival.

The reason of the Special Ker or Mudra in the Twybaklay village.

Twybaklay is one of the biggest Jamatiya villages in the Amarpur Sub-Division of Tripura. There are 93 families in this village consisting of about 600 people. But due to some minor reasons of quarrel (political & social) these village is now divided into two units socially North Twybaklay and South Twybaklay (1979). There is a tradition among the Jamatiyas that in case of establishing a new Kami (para) or separating the existing para, the separated para must perform the Ker Puja.

The performance of a separate Ker Pujs in a village indicates its final and complete separation from the existing para and it is officially accepted by all. Immediately after establishing of a new para, a separate chokdiri is to be elected as the leader of this new para.

After the final division of this kami the chokdiri of the Dakhin (Right) Kami performed the Ker Puja according to the tradition. But on the next morning the chokdiri of the Dakhin Para found that the bamboo sticks which were sanctified by the Ochay during the puja and were fixed on the earth (duari) were uprooted by some persons at night. He also heard the sound of sand throwing on the roof of his house at night. After a few days some of his family members became sick. He then apprehended some misfortune of the village. He was afraid of the activities of some evil spirits. On the next day, he informed all the villagers of the Dhakin para and told them about the unknown misfortune. Then all the villagers unanimously decided to perform this special Ker or mudra for their protection from the unknown misfortune and later on this special Ker or Mudra was duly performed in the village.

(This special Ker or Mudra was performed on the 20th March, 1979 on the Saturday at Twybaklay, Dakhin para)

6. The Noksu Mwtay

Noksu is a female deity. The puja is performed on the day of the Goriya Puja. Noksu is believed to be the guardian of a homestead. It is not a common household deity. Many Jamatiyas believe Noksu as an another form of Monosha.

7. Songotran Puja:

The songotran puja is performed for the better production of crops and also to get favour of the supernatural powers for the performance of some critical work e.g. to find out a lost article. In such cases they promise an offering to songotran. The puja is performed on any Sunday. An earthen cone represents the deity.

8. Kuway Chanayma:

This puja is performed if the Ochay prescribes for it for the removal of the influence of an evil spirit. The puja is performed on the day of maha astami (during the period Durga Puja).

9. Burasa:

This puja is also performed if the Ochay thinks it necessary for a person to be free from the influence of the evil eye of Burasa.

10. Bwrwyrog Puja:

The bwrwyrog Puja is performed according to recommendation of the Ochay for the recovery of a person from any disease. In this puja a platform is made of green bamboo and a naibadya consisting of rice cakes and other things is offered to bwrwyrog. According to the instruction of the Ochay fowl, duck, pigeon; male goats can also be sacrificed to satisfy bwrwyrag,.

11. Nakiri:

It is a benevolent deity. The puja is performed in the month of Chaitra before the Goriya Puja. This puja is officiated by the Ochay.

Pujas and religious functions borrowed from the neighbouring castes and communities:

The Jamatiyas perform many religious functions borrowed by them from their neighbouring non-tribal castes and communities. It should be noted here that their traditional pujas are officiated by their traditional priests. On the other hand the non-traditional puja and religious functions are officiated by their traditional priest or by local non-tribal Brahmin priest. A short description of the borrowed deities are given below:

- 1. Trinath Puja: The worship of Trinath is prevalent among the Jamatiyas. This puja is performed once in a year in the month Baisak (April-May) or Jaistha (May-June). Generally the person who knows the performance of the Puja, recites the glory of Trinath. Three earthen pots, three lamps and three kalkies (bowls of a habul babul) of gancha (hemp) and a naibadya are required for this puja.
- 2. Durga Puja: A few well to do Jamatiya families some times perform this puja on their own. Their conception regarding the form and figure of Durga is almost identical with that of the local non-tribal Hindu castes and communities.
- 3. Saraswati Puja: The saraswati Puja is not done individually. But this goddess of learning is worshipped by the Jamatiya students in their schools.
- 4. Shani Puja: This puja is performed once in a year in the month of Jaistha (May-June). The owner of the house hold may officiate this puja by reciting the glory of Shani from the Shani Panchali (poems glorifying Shani) or only hail the name of Shani.

Besides these, the Jamatiyas observe some other ceremonies and religious festivals according to the date and Tithi (Lunar day) of the almanac like Pausa sankranti, Rathajatra, Dul Purnima, Janmastami, Vimekadashi, Parsha ekadashi, Shyan ekadashi etc.

Construction of the images of their customary deities :

Bamboo plays an important role in the religious life of the Jamatiyas. The images of their traditional deities are made of bamboo. The green bamboos are first hacked into pieces and then designed for making the images of various deities according to their custom. The structures and designs of various deities differ from deity to deity. There are specific designs in constructing of specific deities. The Ochay is the only person to offer necessary instructions regarding the structure of the images and arrangement of bamboo pieces in the puja of various deities.

From the above discussion of the traditional religious functions of the Jamatiyas the following points may be seen.

- 1. The traditional pujas are officiated by the traditional priests.
- 2. The Ochay tests the result of his efforts immediately after the puja and this procedure is known as semanaymwng. It is customary for the householder to enquire if the puja had its desired effect or not and this questioning is termed as semaswngmwng. Semasamwng is the term used when the Ochay reveals all the signs favourable and unfavourable to the householder. If it should happen that the signs are unfavourable then the Ochay applies all his skill and experience and finds out which other deity has accidentally been angered. This process is known as thikananaymwng. In this way at the end of the puja the ochay finds out the answer with the help of a few grains of rice. If the sign is unfavourable he should discover that a particular deity has been rendered displeased. He then immediately arranges for another puja at the end of which he again reveals the result to the anxious worshipper.
- 3. Fire worship has no place in their traditional pujas. But the worship of water, that is to say the propitiation of the deities of streams, mountains is very much prevalent.
- 4. Since the mantras used during the puja are not penned down, the wordings vary from place to place. The substance of course remains unchanged.

If the Ochay happens to have the gift of the gab, he naturally renders them special and wonderful.

- 5. The various idols are made out of bamboo. This shows that the local product is not neglected very much on the contrary.
 - 6. God is known to them as mwtay who is above the five senses.
- 7. Sacrificing animals, the rite of inspiriting an image and propitiation of evil spirits are the important characteristics of the puja.

- 8. The offering placed before the deity varies due to the financial capability, taste etc. of the worshipper. And due to this a buffalo is sacrificed during regional and community level pujas likewise a goat is sacrificed during the village level pujas. In many cases, instead of the name of the worshipped deity, the puja is performed in the name of the sacrificical animal.
 - 9. Flowers are not used in the pujas.
- 10. The neighbouring non-tribal Hindus have greatly influenced the traditional religious functions and festivals of the Jamatiyas. Their customs, rites, and religious festivals bear traces of the religions functions practised by non-tribal Hindus. So great is the impact, so closely inter-twined are they both that now it's next to impossible to tell them apart.
 - 11. Their deities are both benevolent and malevolent, male and female.

CHAPTER V

VILLAGE STUDY REPORT

Given below are the reports of studies of a few villages where the majority of the inhabitants are the Jamatiyas. The object of this report is to give the readers a sampling of physical aspects including their habitation pattern, their location, their distances from the Sub-Divisional head Quarters, the ethnic composition of the inhabitants and few aspects of their socio-economic conditions.

The study of two villages:

- 1. Twybaklay in Amarpur Sub-Division, South Tripura, and
- 2. Shilighati in Udaipur Sub-Division, also in the South are more elaborate than those of the others. Of these two villages Twybaklay is situated in a some what remote area not easily accessible while Shilighati is situated in a comparatively forward place and whose the population consists of many educated people engaged in different kinds of employments.

So it is hoped that the picture of these two villages together will give a some what fuller image of the general socio-economic condition of the Jamatiyas.

These studies were undertaken around 1980-82. But most conditions obtaining during those periods still remains unchanged more or less.

SOCIOLOGICAL STUDY OF TWYBAKLAY— A BACKWARD JAMATIYA VILLAGE.

Twybaklay is a village that lies roughly between Amarpur and Teliamura. This village is in the Amarpur Sub-Division of South Tripura District situated in the midst of Tripura and surrounded by hills. The village was once covered by jungle. This village is about 10 Kms. from Ampi which is a good business centre of this region. The village is under Ampi Tehshil and under the jurisdiction of Ampi Police outpost. There is no good communication between Ampi and Twybaklay. One has to go from Ampi to Twybaklay on foot through jungle path, though a forest road is being constructed.

The name of the village Twybaklay is derived from the Jamatiya word twy which means water and baklay which means seperation. That is, the village is situated in the area where a hilly stream has branched off in many directions. This village is surrounded by very low and flat land. Valleys located between hillocks produce rich crops of paddy, jute etc. The soil of eastern and southern part of the village is laterite and covered here and there with jungle and is thinly populated, as this barren soil cannot maintain a large agricultural population. However, to-day due to deforestation large forest trees are relatively scarce.

The only important place worth mentioning is Amplinagar which is situated immediately on the western side of this village. Ampinagar has got many important centres of public utility namely; Primary Health Centre, Post Office, Police Outpost, One High School and One Primary School, Power House, Water Supply, Cinema Hall, Block Office, Animal Husbandry Office etc.

Twybaklay is absolutely a Jamatiya village. All the inhabitants belong to the Jamatiya Tribe. The total population of this village in 1980 was 521 and the total number of house-holds 93.

Quite close to this village are a few other Jamatiya Villages which stand on the southern side of the village. The names of this villages are Radhanagar Para (with 18 house-holds), Sadagar Para (with 7 house-holds), Garjan Jamatiya Para (with 63 house-holds), Chhechua Jamatiya Para (with 85 house-holds), Tetaimukha (with 26 house-holds) etc. All these villages are inhabited by the Jamatiyas. These villages are situated on a belt of land and are linked with one another and share a very close rapport. This unity is due to their geographical congruity and a spirit of unity which is inherent among the Jamatiyas. There traditional self-governing institution for social adminitration is also responsible for this unity among these villagers.

Medical facility and communication:

For medical facilities for minor cases the local people depend mostly on quacks. Cases of serious nature are, however, taken to the Primary Health Centre at Ampi. Besides all these, there are indigenious medicinemen who are known as Ochay amongst the Jamatiyas. The villagers give much more importance to the Ochay than to the hospital for the recovery of the patient. For the recovery of the patient the Ochay applies various indigenious medicines, mantras (Charms) and performs pujas. The fees of the Ochay is generally given in kind and not in cash. Generally they offer him rice beer.

Surprisingly enough, there is not even a first aid box in any house of the village for animals, though most of them are dependent on agriculture. In case of illness or epidemic the animals are treated with roots and herbs by elderly people having some past experience and also by trial and error methods. The nearest Veterinary Centre is at Ampi. So the death of domestic animal is common in this village.

There is no good communication facility in this village. There is no bus route near the village. The only bus stop is at Ampi. There is no road link between Twybaklay and Ampi. The villagers of Twybaklay come to Ampi on foot through a jungle path. The villagers go from one house to another house through paddy land and the jungle. There are still many villagers who have not even seen a motor car.

Marketing centre and Educational Institutions:

There is no shop of any kind in this village. Even bidi tobacco, betel leaf and dry fish which are classes as conventional necessity to the villagers are not available, as and when required within the village. The nearest market is at Ampi. A bi-weekly market is held at Ampi on every monday and thursday. The market day of monday is more important then that of thursday. On these market days the villagers of Twybaklay come to this market and purchase their necessary goods. When they come to this market they mostly purchase bidi, tobacco, salt, dry fish, betel leaf, oil etc. But they seldom purchase fish or meat or other vegetables. The Jamatiyas do not sell anything in the market. One of the remarkable feature of the Jamatiyas of Twybaklay is that the Jamatiya women seldom come to the market unlike the all other neighbouring tribes like Ringas, Morshums, Kolois etc. The male members like to have tea in the tea stall at Ampi.

There is only one Primary School where classes from one to five are taken. There is only one teacher and it is very difficult to teach from class-I to Class-V. This School was established in 1965 and at present its total student strength is 15 (fifteen). The nearest High School is at Ampi.

The level of literacy in this village is very disappointing. There are only 5/6 persons who can read and write to some extent. There is only one boy who was admitted in the High School at Ampi in Class-VI. In the long history of Twybaklay he is the only boy to go to a High School. He used to come to School on a bicycle. He is the first boy to have purchased a bicycle in 1976 in this village. But he could not pass the examination of that class and has since stopped his study. At present he is the only educated member of this village.

It is tragic that the majority of village folk are not so conscious, as they should be, towards formal type of education imparted at Schools to-day. Early marriage is also an hurdle to overcome in order to raise the percentage of literacy. It has been found that many children are interested in education but their parents are unwilling and disinterested to send their children to School. They prefer to send their children for agricultural work. Though the teacher of the Junior Basic School is trying to encourage the students to come to School, the attendance of the students in the school is far from satisfactory.

But at present, the young generation are feeling the necessity of education. This is due to the development of their political consciousness and outlook. With the development of communication the young generation have come into close contact with towns and plain area. Christian Missionaries are also encouraging them in their education. But the Missionaries are more interested in conversion into Christianity than in spreading education. They are also encouraging young boys to learn the Roman script instead of Bengali script. The picture of female education at Primary standard is as gloomy as anything.

Economy :-

Like most Bengali villagers, the villagers of Twybaklay are also dependent on agriculture. But their agriculture is a mixture of early axe cultivation (shifting cultivation) and settled cultivation with the help of the bullocks and ploughs. Since there is no industrial centre in this region or in its immediate neighbourhood, naturally scope for mobility of occupation particularly from agriculture or allied fields is almost nil. All the villagers are more or less engaged in agriculture.

The economic condition of the people of the Twybaklay village consisting of 93 Jamatiya house-holds has been given below and this may be taken as the representative picture of the whole of the Jamatiya villages of backward areas of Tripura.

TABLE-I

TABLE—I
Category of the families		Number of families	Percentage
	1	2	3
1.	Landless families	30	32.26%
2.	Land owning families	64	68.82%
3.	Land taken onshare cropping	12	12.90%
4.	Families wholly dependent on shifting cultivation	13	13.98%
5.	Partly on shifting cultivation	58	62.37%
6.	Families holding 5 or more than 5 Kanis of land	1	1.08%
7.	Total number of families engaged in shifting cultivation	71	76.94%
8.	Member of Co-operative Society	34	36.56%
9.	Families indebted to money lenders, landlords and traders	25	26.88%
10.	Assistance from the Government for agricultural activities and others since 1970	55	59.14%
11.	Lands transferred to non-tribals during last 10 years	_	_
12.	Lands transferred to non-tribals during last ten to thirty years.	1	1.08%

In an analysis of the above mentioned table it is found that in the Twy-baklay village out of 93 house-holds 30 Jamatiya house-holds are landless which is 32.26% of the total number of families of the village. The total number of land owning families of Twybaklay village is higher in comparison with other tribal village of Tripura. There are 64 land owning families in this village which is 68.82% percent of total number of families. But the quantity of land possessed by these land owning families is very poor.

The system of share cropping (the system in which half of the produce goes to the land owner and another half to the actual tiller of the soil), is also prevalant in this village. There are twelve families which is 12.90% of the total families of this village are engaged in share cropping and it has been observed that all the share cropper families are landless.

Like all other tribes of Tripura, the Jamatiyas of this village are also engaged in Jhuming (shifting cultivation) in addition to their plough cultivation. In this village 71 families of this village are engaged in shifting cultivation. The shifting cultivators of this village are of two types.

The one type, consists of those families which are wholly dependent on shifting cultivation, and the second type consists of families which are partly dependent on shifting cultivation and partly on plough cultivation. The families which are wholly dependent on shifting cultivation is 13 which is only 13.93% of the total families of the village. On the other hand, the families which are partly dependent on Jhuming and partly on plough cultivation is 58 which is 62.37% of the total families of the village. It is worth mentioning that the villagers of Twbybaklay are interested in Jhuming as this village is surrounded by hills of Atharamura.

Besides the above mentioned two types, there is also another group of families which have absolutely abandoned Jhum cultivation and are wholly dependent on plough cultivation and such type of families constitute 24% of the total families of this village which is a remarkable feature of their economy.

One remarkable feature of agricultural economy of this village is that Jhuming (shifting cultivation) is practised by both the land owners and the landless classes of persons. Though 32.76% of the families are landless but 76.34% of the families are practising Jhuming. This is mainly because they want to supplement their income.

The villagers of Twybaklay cultivate two crops, mostly Aman and Aush. For higher production of crops, many families are now using modern fertilisers and insecticides which they obtain from the nearby agricultural office. But they are still following the traditional tools of cultivation. Bullocks and cows, are still their only live stock.

The villagers of Twybaklay are now gradually becoming conscious about the function of the Bank and the necessity of modern co-operative societies. It has been seen that six families of this village have their accounts in the Ampinagar Gramin Bank. They are now aware of the rules and regulations of the Bank regarding monetary transactions and obtaining of loans from the Bank.

In this village there are 34 families who are members of the Ampinagar large scale Multipurpose Co-operative Society which is 36.56% of the total families of this village. During the last ten years, fifty five families of this village which is 59.14% of the total house-holds of the village received monetary assistance from the Government for agricultural works in addition to educational help.

Regarding occupational categories, labour comes next in order. During the off season of agriculture, the villagers are generally engaged in various types of work. They work in road construction or work of the Forest Department as daily labourers during the plantation season of the forest department. They also help one another as exchange labourer.

Ancestral tarde of work includes basket making, making of necessary bamboo made agricultural tools and weaving. They make their necessary bamboo baskets themselves which are essential to them for their daily use. They do not purchase any bamboo made article from market. Both the male and the female folk of this village are skilled in making of these articles. Even the children help their parents in this work.

Like all other tribal communities of Tripura, the Jamatiyas of the Twy-baklay village are also skilled in weaving. All the families of this village are having their traditional loin looms. In the past, they prepared the thread from the cotton of their Jhum.

But now-a-days, they purchase ready made thread from the market and prepare their clothes upon their own loin looms. Both the male and female members of this village know the art of weaving cloths. Their handmade cloths are longlasting. Among the articles prepared by them are mainly riinay (Cloth for using in the lower part of the body), Risa (a piece of cloth used by the girls to cover their breast), bedcover, wrapper (chadar) etc. Their prepared articles are well designed and decorated.

Religious Functions of the Twybaklay village:

The Jamatiyas of Twybaklay are Hindus. The religious beliefs and practices of the Jamatiyas of Twybaklay viliage may be characterised as poly-theistic. These beliefs and practices bear the imprints of the distinct reflections of the local Hindu religious concepts.

In respect of religion, the Jamatiyas of Twybaklay may be classified into 2 (two) sections. These sections are called Vaishnavas and Saktas. The Vaishnava mendicants are called sadhus. These sadhus are vegetarians, and also wear the sacrad thread which is called poita.

The religious functions of this village may be divided into two categories. Their traditional pujas which are officiated by the Ochay of their community and the pujas which are borrowed by them from the local non-tribal Hindu castes and communities are officiated by the Brahmin priests.

The traditional pujas which are performed in the village are:

- 1. The Goriya Puja;
- 2. The Sena Puja;
- 3. The Ker Puja;
- 4. The Agon Puja;
- 5. The Lanpra Puja;
- 6. The Gang Puja;
- 7. The Buradevata Puja;
- 8. The Maylwngma Puja;
- 9. The Khulwngma Puja;
- 10. The Songotran Puja;
- 11. The Puja to end Dondodosa etc.

It is a singnificant feature of their traditional pujas that flowers, durbas and Tulshi leaves are not required in such pajas.

The pujas which are borrowed from the local non tribals are. :

- 1. Shani Puja;
- 2. Trinath Puja;
- 3. Saraswati Puja;
- 4. Manasha Puja;
- 5. Durga Puja etc.

Besides this, the families of Twybaklay also observe some other ceremonies according to the Tithi of the Panjika (almanc). Generally Janmastami, Vimekadasi, Parsha-ekadasi, Shayan-ekadasi etc. according to the dates fixed by the Panjika are observed by the unmarried young gilrs of this village. The male members do not observe it.

The Dul Purnima and the Rathajatra festivals are also observed by some people of this village. On the day of Rathajatra they offer naibadya consisting of fruits, sugar pole, and atap rice in the morning. On this occasion, they also offer cooked rice to the God Jagannath Deb. After the completion of some rituals they sing some religious songs and then distribute the bhog (offering) among all those present.

It is worth mentioning that the borrowed pujas and festivals are generally observed by well to do persons of this village.

House structure:

The houses of the Twybaklay village are situated on the ground of plain lands. The houses of the village are built of split, flattened bamboo with thatched roof. Some houses of this are built with mud wall. The typical Jamatiya houses of the Twybaklay village are very simple in design, always rectangular in shape with a single door. There are only one or two windows which are small in proportion to the size of the house.

Every house of the village has a verandah where fowl, firewood, mortar and other implements are stored. There is a separate kitchen in each house. In each Jamatiya house, there is a fixed place where the two earthern pots of the Goddess Maylwngma and Khulwngma are placed. The houses are closely situated. Each neighbourhood is composed of a number of neighbouring houses. The variation in the house structure indicates the status of the owner.

Changing pattern of the Twybaklay village:

In the past, the Indian villages were regarded as conservative, stoic, unchanging and isolated from one another. So also was the idea about tribal communities. But the rapid changing of social, economic, and leadership pattern of the tribal communities have disproved this theory. As culture is dynamic, the tribal communities have faced and are constantly facing changes. Of course, in spite of the changing pattern of their lives, they have still retained certain traditional characteristics of their communities with modifications here and there to a greater or lesser extent.

Like all other tribes of India, the Jamatiya community of Tripura is also under the constant pressure of these changes. In analysing the changing pattern of the Jamatiyas of Tripura, certain points are to be kept in mind and they are:—

Firstly: In Tripura, there are as many as 19 Scheduled Tribes each maintaining its distinctive culture and tradition and the Jamatiyas constitute on 7.59% of the total tribal population of the State.

Secondly: The non tribals, mainly the Bengalees with their modern education and advancement in Socio-political affairs constitute about 72% of the total population of the State.

So the trend of changing pattern of the Jamatiya community has taken place in two ways. One is the result of their close contact with other tribal communities with whom they have many affinities physical, religious, linguistic etc. and this type of change may be termed as inter-tribal acculturation.

Another has come from their long and inseparable contact with the non-tribals and this type may be termed as tribal-nontribal acculturation.

Besides these two, the modern factors like the impact of Christianity, urbanization, education, modern democratic set up, communication, political parties and various types of scientific inventions which are of recent origin. These factors are in one way or other changing the Jamatiya community.

A sociological study of a Jamatiya village like Twybaklay shows certain unmistakable trends in the above mentioned directions. A brief description of the nature of these changes will be helpful in the analysis of the pattern of these changes—to analyse the changeing scene of the village a brief description of the Twybaklay village is necessary.

Twybaklay is not very old village. No historical record regarding the founding of this village is available. But the old persons of the village are aware of it to some extent. Some of them were mere child when they first came with their parents to settle in this village from the neighbouring villages, and some of them have heard of it from their parents. Practically, the present village of Twybaklay was a deep forest surrounded by a small fertile plain land, situated on the side of a stream. Beside the existing village there was a few Jamatiya villages, where the forefathers of Twybaklay village were living. But after the partition of India when the refugees were coming from Pakistan, a few Jamatiyas sold their land to the refugees and they shifted to the present village. Moreover the well-to-do-members of the other tribes have also purchased their land and the Jamatiyas shifted to the present Twybaklay village for their livelihood. As the Jamatiya are very much united, so the new settlers of the village all belong to the Jamatiya tribe and this is Jamatiya village exclusively.

To begin with, the village Twybaklay situated in interior Tripura and is at a distance of about thirtyfive K.M. from the Sub-Divisional town of Amarpur. Though this village is surrounded by hilllocks and the percentage of literacy is very low and though the villagers of Twybaklay excluding a few persons have not even seen a motor car, yet the influence of modernization and civilization are at work at this village though on a limited scale.

The major factors which influenced the course of development in this village are:

Urban contacts, Modern Education and touring of Government officials. Their matrimonial relationship with other neighbouring villages are also playing an important role in broadening their outlook. Their thinking is now not confined within the village.

Marriage:

During the last ten years fiftyone marriages were performed in this village.

Out of these 23 boys (Groom) married outside of their village within a jurisdiction of about 20 K.M. and their wives are staying with them in the Twybaklay.

Out of the 51 marriages 4 boys of this village married with the girls of the same village and the girls are staying at their husbands house. Besides this, out of the above mentioned 51 marriages 18 girls of this village are married with the boys of different outside villages in chamwrwy nahomani system of marriage and their husbands are living with their wives in their father-in-law's house at Twybaklay. Moreover, six boys of the village married within the village in chamwrwy nahomanni system of marriage and they are also living in their brides' house in Twybaklay.

Thus Twybaklay is related to 20 to 25 neighbouring villages covering an area of about 40 kilometers by matrimonial relationship. So this cultural contact with other villages have led to some modifications in the ways and outlook of the people of this village. Twybaklay is not an isolated village now, culturally is in contact with more than 20 villages.

The blessings of scientific inventions like the radio, bicycles, clocks, wrist watches etc. and the urban contact of a section of the people are influencing the fabric of the rural Jamatiya community.

Till 1970 there was no radio in Twybaklay. But at present, there are seven radio sets in this village. Through these radio sets the villagers listen to various kinds of songs and are aware of current news. They are now trying to imitate various Hindi and Bengali songs. Even an old man of the village sometimes hears the speeches of ministers and other political leaders over these radios. So these radios have influenced the cultural and political outlook of the villagers to some extent.

There was no bicycle in this village till 1975. In 1975 one student of this village who was going to a high School which was situated at a distance of about 10 K.M. from this village, purchased a cycle to go to School. That is the only bicyle in the village till now. With the purchase of this bicyle, some villagers learnt to ride the cycle and they begun coming to the nearby marketing centre regularly. So this close connection with this commercial centre have helped to grow their commercial outlook.

Even upto 1972, there was no clock/watch in this village but in between 1972 and 1979 there are three wrist watches arrived at this village. So now the people have become conscious about the value of time like the urban people.

Dress and ornaments:

In the dress and ornaments of the people of this village, there have been a very noticeable change. In the past the women folk of this village used to wear chains studded with coins round their necks. This chain or necklace is called rangbwtang. Like the Riangs and the Morshum tribes they also used to wear peculiar type of silver ear-rings which is called brindabonful. But now these old fashioned ornaments have been completely given up by the present day women folk. At present not a single women of this village wears this ornament. The girls are now fond of ornaments made of 'rolled gold' and other cheap materials available in the local market. A few years back the Jamatiya women of this village used to wear black coloured mill made ganjees. But now this ganjee is gradually being replaced by modern blouses, though this black coloured ganjees is still found on a few old women of this village. Formerly, the Jamatiya women collected cotton from the Jhum and after spinning them by the hand wheel at home made their traditional clothes. At present most of them buy yarn from the market to prepare their garments. Though the women still wear their traditional dresses, changes in their design and the manner of wearing them has come about.

Generally, the male inhabitants of this village wear mill made dhuties. Earlier most of them used 'markin' clothes which reached knee-level only. But at present they wear mill made dhuties of better quality. Upto the year 1976 nobody of this village had even worn trousers. But since 1976 a few young boys who were in touch with towns began sporting them. In the past, the simple villagers were careless about their dresses, hair, foods etc. But at present most of the young boys are very particular about their health and fashion. They regularly use soap, and are very eager to dress their hair in an attractive manner. Some of them even carry combs in their pockets.

Food habit :

In the food habit and house designs also there has been changes. In the food habit of the people, tea is a new addition. In a few houses of the village, all the necessary articles for the preparation of tea is available. Besides the head of the family generally brings chocolates, biscuits from the market for his children.

During the reign of the late Maharaja Birchandra Manikya Bahadur in the middle of 19th Century, the Jamatiya tribe was given a superior status by allowing them to wear scared thread and the villagers of Twybaklay has been wearing them ever since. He made them Vaishnava and prohibited them from eating meatstuff. He also ordered them to maintain certain rules and regulations of purity in their daily life and the Jamatiyas of Twybaklay have been obeying these customs since then.

But at present most of the Jamatiya young boys of this village are taking meat and are not willing to maintain their social customs and status that were adhered to by their forefathers. In Twybaklay most of the people are habituated to smoke bidi and cigarettes beside their traditional duma (hukkah), Generally they take bidi when not at home and at home they take their traditional duma.

House Design:

A few years ago, all the houses were made of straw but at present, there are two houses in this village with roofs of corrugated tin sheets. In respect of the pattern of construction of the house also, a little change is noticed. Previously their houses were constructed in rectangular shape with the door of the house on the breadthside of the house. Moreover, the number of windows and their sizes were not in proportion with the size of the house. At present, they have started to keep door on the lengthside of the house and increased the size and number of the windows. Most of the walls of the houses are made of mud & clay.

Furniture and Utensils:

There have been several additions to the list of their domestic utensils and furniture in the house of Twybaklay village. The use of aluminium articles is increasing day by day among the villagers. Besides these, brass utensils are also used in a limited scale. Tables, chairs, and chowkis are found in very few houses of this villages. Before 1970, there was no electric torch in this village. The people, then used bamboo made moshals for movement at night. But at present many villagers possess torches. So they can now move at night without any difficulty.

Agriculture and Water Facility:

Before 1970 there was no tubewell or well in this village. The village tank and the hilly streams were their only source of water. At present there are two tubewells and one deep well in this village. There is no remarkable change in the sphere of agriculture of this villages. The villagers still use the traditional agricultural tools. But some of the villagers have been using chemical fertilisers for the better production of the crop and they have been using insecticides for the safety of their crops. The significant change in this respect is that due to the influence of the plain cultivators they are becoming more interested in taking up plough cultivation in addition to their traditional Jhuming.

A very noticeable change is found in the economic activities of the villagers. Before 1976, nobody of this village had anything to do with the post office or bank or Co-operative society. But due to their contact with some Government employees, particularly with the local school teachers they are gradually becoming conscious in respect of their economic activities. At present some people of the village are in touch with the Gramin Bank, Co-operative Societies. Some of the villagers are now coming to the Gramin Bank and Co-operative Society to obtain loan for agricultural works and for digging fishery tanks. About 15 persons of this village are in monetary transaction with the Gramin Bank of Ampinagar and 36.56 percent families of this village hold the membership of Ampinagar large Sized Multipurpose Co-operative Society. The Gramin Bank and the Co-operative Society have extended their helping hand to protect the villagers from the grips of the village mahajans (traditional money lenders).

But it should be mentioned here that all the villagers are still not habituated in coming freely to the Bank to get financial assistance. Though they can get money from the Bank at less interest, they prefer to go to the village money lenders and take loans at a higher interest. But it is fact that the public sectors like the Gramin Bank and Co-operative Societies are gradually becoming more and more popular among the villagers than the private sources.

Treatment:

The factors of utility, convenience and availability have played a more important role in bringing several new elements into the life of the community. The supply of Quinine tablets regularly by the malaria surveliance workers and the efficacy of modern medicine have greatly changed the outlook of the people of this village towards modern system of treatment. But even to-day at the primary stage of ailment, indigeneous herbs and magico-religious practices are still preferred. They come to the hospital or call on a village doctor only when the indigeneous treatment fails. Now most of the villagers do not rely on the absolute power of their traditional system of magico-religious treatments. So the modern medicine is gradually replacing the traditional treatment.

In the matter of marriage also some changes are noticed in this village. Previously, child marriage was a common practice. The average age of the boys for marriage was 13 to 14 and for the girls 15 to 16. But due to economic pressure and modern education the practice of child marriage is gradually diminishing. Even then some of the villagers still continue it on a limited scale. Religion:

A significant change is also found in respect of religious faith of the villagers of Twybaklay. It is absolutely a Hindu village. The people of this village worship all the major deities of All India Hindusim and at the same time they observe most of the rituals connected with the human life cycle characterised by some of their distinctive traditional peculiarities. Many of the villagers also have a clear conception about the holy books of the Ramayana and the Mahabharata. Along with worshiping of the deities of all India Hindusim, the people also continue to observe their own traditional rituals and ceremonies. The traditional festivals like Goriya Puja, Ker Puja, Gang Puja, Burasa Puja etc. are observed in this village along with the Laxmi Puja, Sani Puja, Trinath Puja etc. There are two families who are the disciples of Shree Anukul Thakur.

So their spiritual thinking is also changed to some extent with the changing to their economic, social and political conditions.

Change of attitude:

Regarding the religious faith of the Twybaklay village, it should be mentioned here that some of the young boys of the village are not willing to observe the norms of Hinduism. They think that their claim as Hindu will increase the influence of the local non-tribal Hindus on them. They rare demanding freedom from the hand of the local non-tribal Hindus. These young people do not like to have any social and religious relationship with the local non-tribal Hindus. So these boys even order the villagers not to involve a Brahmin priest for the performance of their religious functions, like funeral ceremony, marriage ceremoney etc. For the performance of their religious functions they call the Ochays (Traditional Priest) to officiate the function.

When I visited this village on 2.4.79 I heard that a certain person of the village had invited a Brahmin priest to officiate the performance of the Sraddha ceremony of his deceased father. But when these young boys heard this, they requested him to change the decision to invite the Brahmin priest. But the villager was determined to engage the Brahmin priest to officiate the Sraddha ceremony and it was duly officiated by the Brahmin priest. After the completion of the Sraddha the villager offered him one cow and a good amount of rice and money as dakshina (fees of the priest) for the peace of the soul of his deceased father. But when the Brahmin Priest was returning to his house with these perticles, he was attacked by those boys and everything grabbed by them.

THE CHANGING SCENE IN THE POLITICAL SPHERE OF TWYBAKLAY VILLAGE—A CASE STUDY.

With the Gaon Panchayat election of 1978, the political trends and consciousness of the people of Twybaklay village have readically changed. At present the people of this village are in contact with the State politics to some extent.

Practically even upto the General Election of 1971, the villagers of Twybaklay were not at all conscious of their political rights. Formerly, the people of this village were much influenced by the Congress Party as the Chokdiri (village leader) of the village himself was the supporter of this party. At that time, generally a few number of the voters would exercise their voting rights. The C. P. I. (M) was very much active among the tribals of the neighbouring villages. But this party could not create any political base in Twybaklay. The people of Twybaklay were very indifferent to the political affairs of the state. So, the Sardars used this opportunity and during the period of election only a few members of the village under their guidance were found active and they would usually collect some of the villagers for casting their votes in favour of the party to which the Sardar belonged. When the election was over the political activities of the village would also come to an end. In fact, the potitical power of the village was in the hands of a few old and elderly members of the village. Besides, the "Chokdiri" was the only man to whom the task of social, political, and religious functions of the village were vested on.

But after 1970 the leaders of the 'Tripura Uapajati Juba Samity' (a State level regional political party of Tripura) began to try to influence over the people of Twybaklay village. As some of the leaders of T.U.J.S. party belonged to the Jamatiya community, the majority of the villagers began to transfer their allegiance from the Congress Party to the T.U.J.S. Party. Moreover, the T.U.J.S. party that claims itself to be the patron of the welfare of the tribals of Tripura, it abled to gain whole hearted support of the young generation of the village. So in the Legislative Assembly Election of 1977 Shri Nagendra Jamatia of T.U.J.S. Party was elected from this area. The Congress and C.P.I.(M) candidates could not influence their political images upon the villagers of Twybaklay.

But the situation was quite changed in Gaon Panchayat Election which was held after six months of the Assembly Election. In the Gaon Panchayat Election, there was a direct contest between a candidate of the T.U.J.S. Party and a candidate of the C.P.I.(M) Party. It was the first time that Congress Party had no candidate from this village and it was also the first time that a C.P.I.(M) candidate contested in the election from this village.

It is interesting to note that in the Assembly Election (1977) though the C.P.I.(M). candidate was utterly denied by the villagers, but in the subsequent Gaon Sabha Election the C.P.I.(M). candidate was defeated by the T.U.J.S. candidate by a margin of 20 (twenty) votes only. So by a difference of only six months, the political trends of the voters of this village was radically changed. Obviously enough, this election helped to create a political foothold of the C. P. I. (M). Party in this village. And it ultimately led to a potlitical division in the village.

Reasons for Political Bifarcation in the Village:

Shri Bikrampada Jamatiya, the C.P.I.(M). candidate for the Gaon Sabha Election was formerly a supporter of the T.U.J.S. Party at the time of Assembly Election of 1977 which was held six months earlier than the Gaon Sabha Election. It is heard that Shri Bikrampada Jamatiya turned emotionally into a C.P.I.(M) candidate in the Gaon Sabha Election. As Shri Jamatiya had a very friendly relation with the school teachers of the village and other teachers who were known as the supporters of Leftist ideology, the T.U.J.S. workers began to suspect him as a supporter of C.P.I.(M) Party.

Moreover, Shri Bikrampada Jamatiya used to sit in a tea-stall at Ampi. The owner of that tea-stall was also an active supporter of C.P.I.(M) party. Thus the movements of Shri Jamatiya increased the suspicion of the workers of T.U.J.S. about him. Besides, Shri Jamatiya is a well-to-do and reputed man of this village. In all his personal affairs, he used to discuss with the school teachers of his village. So, all the members of the T.U.J.S. party began to address him as a 'Communist' ridiculously and began to neglect him. Being neglected and excommunicated by some of his old friends of Uttar Para of his village (North Part), Shri Jamatiya was aggrieved and decided to cut off his relations with the T.U.J.S. Party.

Within a short period the date for Gaon Panchayat Election was announced and the group of the T.U.J.S. party did not invite him to attend the Party Meeting for the selection of the candidate for the ensuing Panchayat Election. Shri Jamatiya took it as a serious insultation towards him and he promised t contest in the Gaon Sabha Election against the candidate of the T.U.J.S. Party. The C.P.I.(M) Party availed this opportunity and invited him to be a candidate of their party. He accepted the offer and contested as a candidate of the C.P.I.(M) Party. Notwithstanding, he was defeated in that election, he succeded to secure a good number of voters in favour of him and the party. He was defeated by a margin of 20 votes only and thus C.P.I.(M) party abled to create a base of their party in the village Twybaklay.

STUDY OF AN ADVANCED JAMATIYA VILLAGE

Shilghati is a village situated at a distance of about sixteen K.Ms from Udaipur, a district town of South Tripura. Udaipur was the capital of Tripura for a long time during the reign of early kings of Tripura. Previously, Udaipur was named as Rangamati. Rangamati came to be known as Udaipur during the regin of Udaimanikya.

Shilghati is located on the northern side of the river Gomoti and is about three K.Ms. from Kakraban which is a semi-urban area. The people of Shilghati often come to Kakraban to meet their daily needs. There is one H. S. School, one Teacher Training College, one Sub-Post Office and one market at Kakraban. As there is no bus stand at Shilghati, the people of this village have to go to Kakraban for buses and vehicles etc. So all the villagers of Shilghati are quite habituated to come to Kakraban at any time and this three kms distance is a little matter to them. There is a regular bus service between Kakraban and Agartala. Shilghati is surrounded by fertile plain lands and the houses are constructed on the tillas which are about 15 to 20 feet high from the plain land.

Shilghati is an old village. No historical records in connection with the actual founding of the village are available but the elderly people have some information regarding the past history 'as it was orally transmitted to them by their forefathers'.

According to the view of some old members of this village, originally the name of the village Shilghati was hwlwyahati which is a Kag-barak word. In the Kag-barak language hwlwy means hard stone and Ghati means side of a tank or a river which is used by the people. According to them at that time there was a lot of big pieces of hard stone on the side of the river which was flowing beside this village. So the Jamatiyas called it by the name of hwlwyg-hati. But in course of time the Bengalees began to call it as Shilighati because in Bengali Shila means stone and Ghat means side of a tank or ariver. Later on when the Bengali officials came to this village, they also recorded it as Shilghati in the official records. So in this way the hamlet hwlwyghati gradually came to be known as Shilghati which is a corrupted from of hwlwighati.

Shilghati is exclusively inhabited by the Jamatiyas. There are one hundred and seventy eight families residing in this village with a total population of about 2000. The village is physically divided between two parts, namely Kasambi (East para) and Wanalwng (West Para). The name Kasambi is a Kag-barak word meaning a kind of tree and the torm Wanalwng is also a Kag-barak term which neans a bamboo garden. So from the name of the two parts of this village it can be said that, in the past there was a deep forest in the present village of Shilghati. The Kag-barak name also indicate the oldness of this village.

There is a Senior Basic School in this village and this was established during the reign of a king of Tripura about 40 years ago. At present there are about eight teachers in this School out of which four teachers belong to the Jamatiya Community. There is one Jamatiya female teacher also in this School. The students strength of this School is 150 out of which the Jamatiya students consists of 90% of the total strength.

In order to give clear cut picture of the economic condition of the Jamatiyas of Shilghati in relation to their agricultural activities the analysis of the data of 142 Jamatiya families of this village is given below:—

SI. No.	Name of the items	Total number of families	Percentage (%)
1	2	3	4
1.	No. of land holding families	120	84.51%
2.	No. of landless families	22	15.49%
3.	No. of families holding 5 or more than 5 kanis of lands.	67	47.18%
4.	No. of families partly dependent on Jhum (Shifting cultivation) and partly on settled cultivation.	114	80.28%
5.	No. of families wholly dependent on shifting cultivation	16	11.27%

1		3	4
6.	Land taken on share cropping basis	55	38.73%
	Traditional skill in the family (Weaving)	141	99.30%
		94	66.20%
9.	No. of members of the local Co-operative Society	73	51.41%
10.	Assistance from the Govt. since 1970:
	 (a) Agricultural activity (b) Village and small scale Industies (c) Irrigation (d) Others (This is excluding educational help) 	51 1 2 9 42 9	35.92% 00.70% 96.01.41% 67.61% 29.58%

From the above Table it will be clear that only 15.49% of the Jamatiyas of this village are landless which is lower than average level of landless of all other Tribes of Tripura which is 20%. It is pleasing to note that 47.18% of the Jamatiya families are holding five or more than five Kanis of agricultural land which clearly indicates the soundness of their economic condition. In order to supplement their income most of the Jamatiyas practice Jhum (Shifting) cultivation besides the plough cultivation.

In the Shilghati villages 80.28% of families practice shifting cultivation along with the plough cultivation. In this vaillage only 11.25% families depend wholly on Jhum cultivation.

In the Jamatiya community there are some persons who practise share cropping inspite of having their own land. In this village 38.73% families are engaged in share cropping. The landless families are mostly engaged in share cropping and they also work as agricultural labourer and sometimes as day labourer along with practicing Jhum cultivation. In this way the landless persons are sometimes engaged in more than one occupation.

The people of this village also grow a large number of pineapples. Shilghati is famous for pineapples and the villagers earn a good amount of money from this suorce. So in this respect the people of Shilghati are more interested in the plantation of orchards than the people of Twybaklai Village.

Unlike the Twy-baklay village, all the Jamatiyas of Shilghati irrespective of male and female are bi-lingual (Kag-barak and Bengali). In the Twy-baklay village due to its little contact with the Bengalee people, only a few male members of the village can speak Bengali fluently but the women there only understand Bengali. They cannot speak it. Unlike the Twybaklay village about 90% of the people of Shilghati can put their signature. 21 people of Shilghati are Govt. employees including public undertakings who are serving in the various Govt. departments like Oil & Natural Gas Commission, Education Department, Central Reserve Police etc. So Govt. service in addition to agricultural activities have strengthen their ecconomic stability. Many students of Shilghati go to High Schools and Colleges. The people of Shilghati regularly read various English and Bengali newspapers such as the Dainik Sambad, the Anandabazar, the Jugantar and the Chini Kak (A Kag-barak weekly newspaper) and magazines like the Sunday, the Illustrated Weekly, Desh, etc. So in respect of education and modern outlook. Shilghati is far ahead of Twy-baklay village and it may be compared with any modern village of Tripura.

Like the Twy-baklay and all other tribal villages of Tripura there are loin looms in almost every house of Shilghati. Both the boys and girls know the technique of weaving. They perpare there Ritrak (Bedsheets), Rignay (Women's garment), Rituku (napkin) wrappers etc. from their own loinloom. Their prepared articles are well designed and famous for longivity.

Formerly, like the villagers of Twi-baklay, the villagers of Shilghati also used to wear Rangbwtang (Necklace of coins). The female members of the village used to wear Achlay (Chains), Boati (Bangles) etc. as their favourate ornaments. Like the women of Twy-baklay, the women of Shilghati were also very fond of black coloured mill made Ganjees. The male members of Shilghati like all other Jamatiya villages also wear Kachlui-borok (One peculiar type of handmade shirt for working in the field) during their work in the Jhum or in the field. But at present these dress and oranaments have become obsolete as the Shilghati village for a long time and even many young boys of the village do not know the names of the above mentioned ornaments and dresses.

At present most of the male members of the village use dhuti and shirts and the young boys generally wear modern tailored shirts and pants. At their houses the boys also are found wearing their home made napkins.

The girls and the women of this village normally use blouse as their upper garment and Rignay as their lower garment. The married girls also use shanka (Conch shell bangle), and vermillion on their forehead. The girls of this village also prepare one kind of coloured bedsheets by joining two pieces of clothes which is called Rinay-merek in their dialect. (rinay=lower garment merek=coloured). Formerly they prepared it by the thread spun from cotten collected from their Jhum. The colour of these clothes were also prepared in their indigeneous process and the colour is also permanent. For making black colour they use fruits of nela tree, for red colour they use the fruits of asung tree and for yellow colour they use defal fruits collected from the near by forest. For making permanent colours they first boil the fruits in water and later soak the threads into the decoction of the fruits. But at present they do not make the threads from the cotton and instead of it they purchase coloured yarns from the market and prepare their garments.

Unlike in Twy-baklay which may be regarded as a representative of the backward Jamatiya villages of Tripura, in Shilghati the Sikwlabwtwk ceremony (Sikwla=youth, bwtwk=liquor) is not held in this village. At present this has been transformed into a common feast with indigenous cakes in Shilghati.

Unlike in Twy-baklay child marriage is not practised in Shilghati and the bride is generally junior to the bridegroom in respect of age. The average age for marriage for the boys is between 20 to 25 years and for the girls it is between 15 to 20 which is an exceptional case for the Jamatiya community.

This village is related with a large number of Jamatiya villages by marriage relationship. Inter-tribal marriage is also found in this village to some extent. Many boys of this village are in marriage relationship with the Noatia, Tripurj and Riang communities and this has resulted in the synthesis of their culture with those of other tribes.

Generally, the Jamatiya girls do not marry outside their community. In the Shilghati village some Jamatiya girls are married to the boys outside their tribe like the Tripuris. But for the performance of such marriage, the approval of the Jamatiya hoda-okra (head of the Supreme council) is required. In Shilghati boys of non-Jamatiya community who have married Jamatiya girl and are residing in that village have accepted Jamatiya title and have been accepted in the Jamatiya society. These newly admitted Jamatiyas have been enjoying all the previleges of an original member of the Jamatiya community.

As in Twy-baklay village both the chamwrwy tongmani (bridegroom residing in father-in-law's house) and the hajwk rohomani system of marriage are also in practised in Shilighati.

Besides these, marriage in the bride's house like that of the Bengalees is also in practise on a limited scale. In this village it was observed that the widowers have married widows only though they could have married a divorced woman or even a virgin.

According to the view of some elder persons of the village, during their childhood they used to play Kadeng (stilt walking). At present due to the non-availability of sukuy (Ghila in Bengali), another popular game named as sukuy throwing has become extinct among them. Badol khum and Ray Badul were two other favourite games of them.

There are two rickshaws in this village pulled and owned by two Jamatiyas of this village. There is one grocery shop in this village and the name of the owner of the shop is Shri Tarini Mohan Jamatiya. Some richmen of this village have pucca houses at Kakraban bazar rented out to the shop-keepers there.

Shilghati predominantly a Hindu village. There is no common worshipping place like temple in this village. But the people of Paschim para (Wanalwng) perform Rakshakali Puja every year at a particular place collectively. This puja is perfomed on any Saturday or Tuesday in the month of Agrahayana (November-December). Similarly, the people of the Purba Para (Kasambi) also perform Bolong Kate Romani Puja (Worship of the God of forest) collectively, under an old banyan tree in this village. This puja is also performed on any Saturday or Tuesday in the month of Agrahayana.

There is a very old banyan tree standing just on the middle part of this village and all the villagers look upon it with reverence. Many of the villagers believe that there is an invisible shivalinga lying inside of this tree. Some elderly persons said that many years ago, one influential person of this village wanted to cut the tree to construct a house in its place. But later on he was compeiled to change his decision as he was forbidden by some supper natural power in dream. So this helped to the growth of some super natural beliefs among the people and they begun to attach some degree of super natural beliefs with this tree. On the day of Shiva Chaturdashi many villagers offer Puja and sacrifice he-goats under this sacred tree. So this holy tree has become an important place of their religious functions.

Like the people of Twy-baklay, the people of Shilghati also worship maylwngma (Goddess of coin) and keep a stone in the earthen pot of the Goddess maylwngma.

Like other similar triber of Tripura the Jamatiyas of Shilghati also mark a conical symbol on the earthen pot of the Goddess maylwngma. When a family is to be seperated from a joint family they have to establish a new earthen pot of maylwngma and it signifies the final seperation of the part from the joint family. On the day of this puja they keep 'their daborok (Chopper), Axe, and all other useful instruments of daily work before the earthen pot of maylwngma for her blessing.

After preliminary examination of a sickman if the Ochay thinks that the propitiation of Burasa is nacessary he then prescribes for it. The propitiation is performed in the forest according to the advice of the Ochay. The sacrifice of the animal in this Puja is made according to the selection of the Ochay.

The Annaprashan ceremony (giving rice to the child for the first time) is also performed among the Jamatiyas of the village. On the day of this ceremony, the father of the child invites relatives and friends according to his capability and it is a custom of their society that all the invitees should come with a presentation.

The Jamatiyas of Shilghati as a rule, cremate their dead bodies. Soon after the expiry information is sent arround to the relatives and friends and also to the neighbouring villages. The corpse is washed, clothed and tied to a bamboo bier. The bier is carried by four persons on their shoulder and proceed to the cremation ground with a procession accompanied by Mridanga, Kortal, Bell etc. and they keep on repeating some solemn slogans such as 'haribal'. It is the custom of the Jamatiyas of the Shilghati that as soon as the villagers receive the death news of a person, one member from each family will go to the nearby forest and collect at least a piece of dried wood and take it to the cremation ground. Even the relatives from the neighbouring villages attend to the cremation ground with a piece of dried wood.

Unlike the Twy-baklay village, the Jamatiyas of Shilghati do not invite anyone for taking meal on the day of the Sraddha ceremony. They only inform the relatives to observe the period of impurity and to take vegetarian food.

The worship of Noksu is also observed in this village by some families. Those who worship Noksu generationwise are according to them, decendant of the Tripuri origin.

Previously there was a Co-operative Society among the Janatiyas of this village. This Co-operative society was formed by the Villagers of Shilghati and its membership was limited only to the Villagers and it was compulsory for them. This system was known as mustichaul (handful of rice). The aim of this society was to perform various religious festivals of the village. In this system two assistants of the Chokdiri of the village collected a certain amount of rice once in a week from each house and deposited the whole amount of rice to the chokdiri of the village (Village headman). The collected rice was spent only for the performance of the village Pujas and nobody was allowed to take any loan from the Co-operative society for personal affairs. The customary rule of this society was that after meeting the annual expenditure of the Puja the surplus amount of money from the sale proceeds of the collected rice had to be deposited to the fund of hoda-okra. The Chokdiri of this village used to spent the whole amount of money that was collected as per their annual budget of expenditure.

It should be mentioned here that the poor and incapable persons of this village were generally exempted from donating to this collection but they were allowed to enjoy all the privileges of this village equally. But this system of musti chaul was stopped about 5/6 years ago. At present, for the performance of any village festival they collect subscriptions from individual houses of the village.

At present, in the place of Musti Chaul the villagers Shilghati have started a Co-perative society named dharma Gola. But unlike the Musti Chaul system the aim of this dharma Gola is not to pay for the expenses of any village Puja. It is not related to any religious functions. Its aim is to provide monetary help to the villagers in time of their need. It is compulsory for all the villagers of Shilghati to become members of this dharma Gola. But no outsider is allowed to become its member.

Each individual family of this village has to deposit 10 kg. of paddy in the first instance to become a member of the dharmagola. In this system if a family is incapable to deposit the required amount of paddy, the other villagers would help him to become a member by contributing from their stock. Any villager can take loan from this dharmagola in times of his need at a certain rate of interest which is generally lower than the village mahajans (money lenders).

This dharmagola was started in this village about 15 years ago. Generally, all the villagers select two collectors and one manager for its management in the house of the Chakdiri of the village. But the Chakdiri has no right to interfere in its administration.

This dharmgola is also at work in some neighbouring Jamatiya villages like Hadra, Totabari etc. It should be noted here that this type of dharmagola is not found among the Jamatiya villages of Amarpur and Khowai Sub-Division and not in Twybaklay also.

It is informed that in the past, the Sati system was in practice in this village. There is an old dumbur (figtree) tree still standing in one corner of the village on the side of the river Gomoti which still bears the testimony of the practicing of the Sati in this village.

Regarding the practice of Sati in the Jamatiya community of Tripura reference to a letter of Mr. F. Loyal, the Commissioner of Chittagong in his report to the Governor of Dacca in 1888 A.D. may be made. The letter of Mr. F. Loyal to the Maharaja of Tripura printed in the Rajmala is here:—

"During my recent movements in the Sonaumura Division in March last, I heard of three cases of the kind having occured amongst the Jamatiyas in the course of the last two or three years. These cases are noted in margin.

- 1. Wife of Charan Senapati of Burma Cherra about three years ago.
- 2. Wife of Ganga Mohan Senapati, named Beni Lakshmi of Failong Cherra in about Baisak before last.
- 3. Wife of Milaram Burma of Hantari Chowdhury's para on Tiruppa Cherra, in about Magh last."

(Sen Kaliprasanna, Shri Rajmala Vol. II, P.209)

It has been informed by some old persons of the village that the last Sati was held under this dambur (fig free) tree. Late Tepan Chowhdury of the village was arrested and imprisoned for two to three months for observing this system as this Sati practice was prohibited in Tripura by the order Birchandra Manikya in 1889.

It was due to the initiative of Umhanta Das and in accordance with the advice of Mohini Mohon Bardhan, the Minister of Tripura that Birchandra Manikya prohibited the practice of Sati in Tripura by a duly promulgated order in 1889 A.D. (Bengal Administrative Report 1888-89).

The grand children of Tepan Chowdhury are still living in this village. His grand child Shri Nirmal Jamatiya informed that their fore-father came to this village from the Khowai Sub-Division and at that time they were not known as Jamatiya. At first they used the Surname Fa.

The genealogy of Tepon Chowdhury is given here:

- 1. Kamdil Fa

 2. Binanda Fa

 3. Tepan Chowdhury (He was imprisoned for the practicing of Sati)

 4. Dithi Chandra Jamatiya

 5. Ujjal Chandra Jamatiya

 Janardhan Jamatiya
- 6. Purnadhayal Jamatiya.

Nirmal Jamatiya.

- 7. Binanda Mohan Jamatiya
- 8. Ajit Jamatiya.

Jamatiya Villages of the Kalyanpur Moyol (Region). Khowai Sub-Division

The Jamatiyas of the Kalyanpur moyol of Khowai Sub-Division migrated from Udaipur, Amarpur and Sonamura Sub-Division now in the south Tripura District. It is learnt from the Jamatiya elders that the settlers of the Kalyanpur mayal were Sri Mahamuni Jamatiya, Mangalmuni Jamatiya, Bargamuni Jamatiya, Duhada Jamatiya, Lahin Chandra Jamatiya, Padachinha Jamatiya and Sri Angamuni Jamatiya. They settled in the present village of Moharbari and Baishghariya, first. Later the vast tracts of cultivable land of this area attracted the Jamatiyas of the South and they gradually came to settle. At present there are about 34 Jamatiya villages consisting of 700 Jamatiya households in the Kalyanpur moyol.

The Kalyanpur moyol was established on a Monday on the 25th Falgoon in 1324 T.E. T.E means Tripura Era, the Calander introduced by the Kings of Tripura. If 570 is added to T.E the year in A.D. is found. So 1324 T.E. means 1914 A.D. The first sordar of the Kalyanpur moyol were Shri Arjunda Jamatiya and Shri Krishna Chandra Jamatiya and they took over 1328 T.E. Shri Gaharda Jamatiya and Shri Goalnanda Jamatiya were recognised by the hada akra (Head of their traditional supreme council) on the 23rd Chaitra 1335 T.E.

A copy of the letter of credentials giving these two men permission to conduct the trials of the Jamatiyas of the moyol according to their traditional custom is given here along with its english version:

This village is situated on a high land and about 8 K.M. away from Teliamura to the south.

It is bounded on the north, south, east and west by the Jamatiya villages of Kunjamura, Sarmakem, Khasiyamangal and Baramura hill range. About 35 Jamatiya families live in this villdage. All the villagers belong to the Jamatiya community. The name Twythampwy probably has been derived from the Jamatiya word Twy which means water and thampwy meaning flies and mosquitos.

7. Kunjomura:

This village is situated about 5 K.M. away from Teliamura to the east. It is bounded on the north, south, east and west by a stream, Twythampwy, Khowai river and Ballary respectively. There are about 4 Jamatiya households in this village. Shri Sakhinanda Jamatiya of this village is a famous man of this area. He was the Moyol Panchay of Kalyanpur Moyol.

8. Icharbil:

It is situated about 2 K.M. away from Teliamura to the north and about 31 K.M. away from Khowai to the south. This village is bounded on the north south, east and west by Khamarbari, Khowai-Teliamura Road, Khowai Teliamura Road and Darjeeling respectively. It is a mixed village of the Jamatiyas and the Bengalees. There were about six households in this village before the violence of Tripura in 1980.

9. Trishabari :

This village is situated beside Khowai-Teliamura Road and about 30 K.M. away from Khowai to the South and 3 K.M. away from Teliamura to the north.

It is divided by Khowai Teliamura road between east and west parts. The eastern part of the village is inhabited by the Jamatiyas and the western part is inhabited by the Jamatiyas and the Bengalees jointly. About 35 Jamatiya households live in this village. As the village stands on the side of Trisha cherra (a stream) it is named as Trishabari. Late Indra Kumar Jamatiya and his son late Krishnapada Jamatiya were the Moyol Panchay of the Kalyanpur Moyol. There is a wood made image of lord Jagannath in their house. This village is famous for Rathajatra festival.

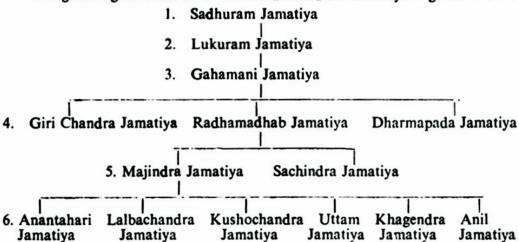

10. Khamarbari:

This village is situated about 4 K.M. from Teliamura to the north-east and about 29 K.M. from khowai to the South. It is bounded on the north South, east and west by paddy fields, village Darjeeling and Hataykwchwk, Trisabari and the Baramura hill range respectively. About 90 Jamatiya families live in this village. It is inhabited by the Jamatiyas exclusively.

There is a junior Basic School, one Balwari School, one weaving centre, one handicraft centre and one grocery shop in this village. Some persons of this village are engaged in government service also. This is an electrified village.

The late Radhamadhab Jamatiya, the ex-moyol Panchay of the Kalyanpur Moyol was the resident of this village. And his son Sri Majindra Mohan Jamatiya is the present Moyol panchay of the Kalyanpur Moyol. Sri Anantahari Jamatiya, son of Sri Majindra Jamatiya was the first person in the Jamatiya community to be a member of the Tripura Legislative Assembly.

11. Chalitabari:

This village stands beside Khowai Teliamura Road. It is about 29 K.M. distant from Khowai to South and about 4 K.M. distant from Teliamura to north. It is bounded on north, south, east and west by Tibrubari, Trisa, Teliamura Khowai Road and Gayriyng Kukhan respectively. The Jamatiyas call this village as Twy Thayplo (Twy means water and Thayplo is called as Chalita in Bengali). So Chalitabari is the Bengali name of Twy Thayplo.

12. Gayriyng Kukhan:

This village is situated about 29 K.M. away from Khowai to the south and 4 K.M. away from Teliamura to the north. It is bounded on the north, south, east and west by Moharbari, Khamarbari, Chalitabari and a Tripuri village respectively. It is learnt that this village got its name Gayriyng kukhan which literally means the burnt watching shed of the Jhum as once a gayriyng was burnt here. In the past it was exclusively inhabited by the Jamatiyas. But now it is divided into two parts east and west. About 10 Jamatiya families live in the eastern part of the village.

13. Tibrubari:

It is situated about 28 K.M. away from Khowai to the south and about 5K.M. away from Teliamura to the north. This village is bounded on the north, south, east and west by Moharcherra, Chalitabari, Khowai Teliamura Road and Moharbari respectively. It is an old Jamatiya village and is known as Twybruhatay by the Jamatiyas. The Jamatiya word twy means water, bru means water buble, and hatay means hill or high land. So it means a high land with water spring. Now it is known as Laltila.

It is bounded on the north, south, east and west by the Jamatiya villages of Khamarbari, Twysindaray, Icharbil and Karailong, About 15 Jamatiya families live in this village and is exclusively inhabited by the Jamatiyas. It is situated on a high Tilla land.

23. Hataykwchwk:

It is situated about 31 K.M. away from Khowai to the south and 2 K.M, away from Teliamura to the west. It is bounded on the north, south, east and west by the villages of Khamarbari, Twysindry, Icharbil and Garjan respectively. The name hataykwchwk probably has been derived from the Jamatiya word hatay means high land and kwchwk means high. Literally the word hatay kwchwk means high land. There are about 80 Jamatiya households in this village. Sri Haradhan Jamatiya, the ex- moyol Panchay of Kalyanpur moyol lives in this village.

In this village a group of young boys founded a langra Goriya Mission in 1981 under the leadership of Shra Krishnadhan Jamatia a resident of this village. The aim of this mission is to revive their traditional socio-religious functions through a reformation movement. The chief aim of this movement are !

- 1. Prohibition of offering of wine and sacrificing of animals and birds in the puja.
- 2. To stop the worshipping of the evil spirits.
- 3. To appoint only Jamatiya Ochay (priest) to officiate their pujas.
- 4. To begin the worship of only Goriya and Lanpra.

The followers of this Mission believe in the annual worship of the Goriya and are in favour of setting up separate establishments dedicated to the Goriya in each and every Jamatiya village. The purpose is that then the Goriya, apart from the annual puja would also be worshipped during some particular days of the year. In the eastern corner of this establishment, a platform (altar) would be raised up on the courtyard, where every week a lamp will be kept burning (Chati sogmwng) and some incense sticks (sataray sogmwng) be lighted, prayers, religious songs and discussions would also be included. The particular week day up on which the Goriya puja would be fixed will also have to be the day up on which the first Goriya puja was performed. A calendar of dates will naturally be consulted. The puja will be carried out in the evenings. A naibadva (offering) will be offered to Goriya in the morning. There shall be no sacrificing of animals and birds.
