

Conclusion:

Qualitative and wholesome improvement in the quality of life is the right of every citizen of the country. The Sentinelese tribes, though leading a secluded should not be denied the benefit of civilization but the approach has to be very cautious. If the process leads to their physical and cultural disruption and exploitation by outside forces, the very purpose is defeated. Hence the need for extreme caution and preventive measures need not be overemphasized.

The Sentinelese is an extremely small population totally unaware and having no understanding of their position of citizen of this great country. Therefore, their continued survival and protection is the duty and responsibility of the government. They have a right to live the way they like and to embrace change according to their needs. There has to be a persistent and concerted effort from the civilized and dominant community of the country to make it possible for them.

In the past, the Administration had adopted "hands off" policy towards the Sentinelese. The same has been replaced by "eyes on", policy recently wherein circumnavigation of the North Sentinel Island is being carried out by the designated team of the Administration to keep a vigil around the North Sentinel Island and to make systematic observation of the behaviour, general aspects of Health, assessment of topography in the surrounding areas etc.

The measures suggested by me under the topic "measures" especially relating to carrying out of research on the