

11. The Commission would like to have an appreciation of the State Government of the manner in which the trained personnel used the training for promoting tribal affairs.	Not Applicable
12. Are there any arrangements for training of the personnel belonging to nonofficial agencies like voluntary organizations either in government-run training institutions or private institutions? In either case, please give full information in regard to the nature of such courses, the number of personnel trained, their deployment and the service they have rendered tribal areas.	Not Applicable
13. Please give information on particulars indicated in the preceding question in respect of personnel belonging to the state public sector undertakings and, if possible, of the central public sector undertakings.	Not Applicable
14. Nearly every state in the country has a State Administrative College, a Rural Development Institute, and in states of tribal concentration a Tribal Research Institute (TRI), apart from various other training institutes. The Commission would like to have from you a full appraisal of	Not Applicable
(a) the working and performance of TRI or an institute doing the same type of work but known by a different designation	Not Applicable
(b) the out-turn on tribal development of the other institutes	Not Applicable
15. What part has been played by the Administrative Training Institute and Rural Development Institute in the matter of tribal affairs? Specifically, have subjects pertaining to tribal affairs been included in the various training courses or, better still, have some training courses been devoted to tribal affairs and particularly tribal development in these institutes? If not, please state the reason why.	Not Applicable
16. One category of training which deserves utmost attention in the tribal context is training of teachers posted in schools and colleges in the tribal areas. Education of STs has been regarded as a key sector in the reports of the various working groups, but somehow it has been lagging behind on account of want of adequately trained and devoted teachers preferably those	Not Applicable