

who know tribal languages. Hence, this aspect needs to be looked into very carefully. What steps have the State Government taken in this regard?
17. The State Government must be aware of the importance being attached to participatory rural appraisal (PRA) in development schemes. Has this component been included in the training programmes? If not, the State Government might consider its inclusion.	Not Applicable
18. One aspect of training which requires careful and deep consideration of the State Government is the training of Panchayat members, Sarpanches and Chairmen, in the background of Article 243A-Q and Articles 243P-ZG and PESA Act 1996. The operation of the Tribal sub-Plan and the ITDPs is being reoriented in accordance with the provisions of these. It is, therefore, of great importance that the State Government should run training courses to enable the Panchayat functionaries to take on the management and accounts systems of the Panchayats and ITDPs. The State Government might have already considered this matter and started training courses. If 'so, please detail them fully. If not, please let the Commission know what are the schedules in this regard?	Not Applicable
